(4) stt I

MISGELLANEOUS PIE゙CES,

- $\mathrm{IN}^{\prime}$
$P \quad R \quad S \quad E$,

I $\mathbf{Z}$

J OHN AIKIN, M. D.
1
AND

ANNA LITITIA BARBAULD.

THE THIRD EDITION.
L O N D O N:

FRINTEDEOR J.JOHNSON, INST.PAUL'S CKURCR-XARD.
MODCGOKIX.

$$
\begin{aligned}
& P R \\ & 4001 \\
& A 5 A 16 \\
& 1792
\end{aligned}
$$

C O NTENTS.

Page
ON the Province of Comedy ..... I
Tbe Hill of Science, a Vifion ..... 27
On Romances, an Imitation ..... 39-
Seláma, an Imitation of Ofian ..... 47
AgainfI Inconffency in our Expectations ..... 59
The Canal and the Brook, an Apologue ..... 79
On Monaftic Infitutions ..... 88
On the Pleafure derived from Objects of Terror; -with Sir Bertrand, a Fragment - - .- 117On the Heroic Poem of Gondibert -..... $133^{8}$An Enquiry into thofe Kinds of Difiress which -excite agreeable Senfations; with a Tale - - igo
Effay on Devotional Tafte ..... 220

P R O V I N C E

C O M E D Y.

VARIOUS are the methods which art and ingenuity have invented to exhibit a picture of human life and manners. Thefe have differed from each other, both in the mode of reprefentation, and in the particular view of the fubject which has been taken. With refpect to the firf, it is univerfally al-: lowed that the dramatic form is by far, the moft perfect. The circumftance of B leaving leaving every character to difplay itfelf in its own proper language, with all the variations of tone and gefture which diftinguif it from others, and which mark every emotion of the mind; and the fcenic delufions of drefs, painting, and machinery; contribute to ftamp fuch an appearance of reality upon dramatic reprefentations as no other of the imitative arts can attain. Indeed, when in their perfection, they can fcarcely be called imitations, but the very things themfelves; and real nature would perKaps appear lefs perfect than her counterfeit.

- The Drama has from early antiquity been diftinguifhed into the two grand divifions of Tragedy and Comedy. It would feem that the general character: of thefe was univerfally underfood and agreed on; by the adoption of the terms tragic
tragic and comic, derived from them, into the language of every civilized people. The former of thefe is, we know, conftantly applied to objects of terror and diftrefs; the latter, to thofe of mirth and pleafantry. There is, however, a more comprehenfive diftinction of our feelings, which it is proper firft to confider.

When we examine the emotions produced in our minds by the view of human actions, we fhall obferve a divifion into the ferious, and the ludicrous. I do not think it neceffary to define or analyfe feelings with which all are well acquainted. It is enough to obferve that ferious emotions are produced by the difplay of all the great paffions which agitate the foul, and by, all thofe actions which are under the jurifdiction of the grand rules of religion and morality;

Be
and
and that ludicrous emotions are excited by the improprieties and inconfiftencies of conduct or judgment in fmaller matters ; fuch as the effects of falle tafte, or trifling paffions. When we now apply the words tragic and comic, we fhall at once perceive that the former can relate folely to fuch fubjects as occafion Jerious, and the latter to fuch as occafion ludicrous emotions.

Now, although the practice of writers has frequently introduced ludicrous parts into the compofition called a Tragedy, and ferious parts into that called a Comedy; yet it has ever been underftood that what conftitutes the effential and invariable character of each is fomething which is expreffed by the terms tragic and comic, and comes under the head of ferious or ludicrous emotions. Referring therefore to 2 future confideration, the propriety of introducing ferious parts. in a Comedy, I fhall now lay down the character of Comedy as a dramatic compofition, exbibiting a ludicrous picture of buman life and manners.

There are two fources of ludicrous emotions which it is proper here to diftinguifh. One of thefe arifes from cbaraEter, the other from incident. The firft is attached and appropriated to the perfon, and makes a part, as it were, of his com-. pofition. The other is merely accidental, proceeding from awkward fituations, odd and uncommon circumftances, and the like, which may happen indifferently to every perfon. If we compare thefe with regard to their dignity and utility, we Thall find a further difference; fince that proceeding from cbaracter belongs to a very refpectable part of knowledge, that of human manners; and has for its end the correction of foibles: whereas that proceeding from incident is mean and trivial in its origin, and anfwers no other purpofe than prefent mirth. ${ }^{\text {'T }}$ is true, it is perfectly natural to be pleafed with rifible objects, even of the loweft kind, and a faftidious averfion to their exhibition may be accounted mere affected nicety; yet, fince we rank Comedy among the higher and more refined fpecies of compofition, let us affign it the more honourable office of exhibiting and correcting the ludicrous part of cbaraiters; and leave to Bartholomew Fair the ingenious contrivances of facetious drollery, and handicraft merriment.

The following fources may be pointed out from whence comic character is derived.

Nations, like individuals, have certain leading features which diftinguifh them threm from others. Of thefe there are always, fome of a ludicrous caft which afford matter of entertainment to their neighbours.: Comedy has at all times made very free with national peculiarities; and, although the ridicule has often been conducted in a trivial and illiberal manner, by greatly overcharging the picture, and introducing idle and unjuft accufations, yet I think we need not go fo far as entirely to reject this fort of ludicrous painting; fince it may be as important to warn againft the imitation of foreign follies, as thofe of our own growth. Indeed, when a Frenchman or Irifhman is brought upon our ftage merely to talk broken Englifh, or make bulls, there can be no plea either of wit or utility to excufe the illiberal jeft : but, when the nicer diftinctions of national character are expofed with a juft and delicate ridicule, the fpectacle may be both.

[^0]entertaining and inftructive. Amidft the tribe of foreign valets to be met with on the Englifh theatre, I would inftance Canton in the Clandeftine Marriage, as an admirable example of true national character, independent on language and grimace. The obfequioufnefs and attentive flattery of the fervile Swifs-Frenchman are quite characteriftic, as well as the carelefs infolence and affected airs of Brush the Englifh footman *. O'Fla-

[^1]HERTY, the Irifh foldier of fortune in the Weft Indian, is an example of fimilar merit; much more fo, I think, than the character from which the piece has its title.

- Although fome part of the character of a nation is pretty uniform and conftant, yet its manners and cuftoms in many points are extremely variable. Thefe variations are the peculiar modes and fathions of the age; and hence the age, as well as the nation, acquires a diftinguifhing character. Fafhion, in general, ufurps a dominion only over the fmaller and lefs important part of manners ; fuch as drefs, public diverfions, and other matters of tafte. The improprieties of fafhion are therefore of the abfurd and ludicrous kind, and confequently fit fubjects of comic ridicule. There is no fource of Comedy more fertile and pleafing than this;
and none in which the end of reformation is likely to be fo well anfwered. An extravagant fafhion is exhibited upon the ftage with fuch advantage of ridicule, that it can fcarcely ftand long againft it ; and I make no doubt that Moliere's Marquis de Mafcarille, and Cibber's Lord Foppington, had a confiderable fhare in reforming the prevailing foppery of the times. Fafhion has alfo too much interfered in fome more ferious matters, as the fentiments and ftudies of the age. Here too Comedy has made its attacks; and the Alcbemift, the Virtuofo, the Antiquary, the Belle Efprit, have in their turns undergone the ridicule of the ftage, when their refpective purfuits, by being fafhionable, were carried to a fanciful extravagance. It is well known that Moliere, in his comedies of the Femmes Sçavantes, and the Precieufes Ridicules, was as fuccefsful againft the pedantry and pretenfions to wit which infected fected the French nation, and particularly the ladies, at that period, as Cervantes in his attack upon knight-errantry.

There is another point of national or fafhionable folly in which Comedy might be very ufeful; yet the attempt has been found dangerous; and perhaps the fubject is too delicate for the ftage, confidering the abufes to which it is liable. I mean popular fupertition, and prieftcraft. Moliere, who with impunity had attacked every other fpecies of folly, was almoft ruined by expofing a hypocrite and a devotee; and the licentious ridicule of Dryden, and others of that age, was generally aimed, not only againft fuperftition, but religion. The Spanifb Friar, however, is an inftance in which, with exquifite humour, the ridicule can hardly be blamed as improper; and it certainly did more hurt to Roman Catholic fuperftition than he could ever remedy by his fcholaftic Hind and Pantber. How far the Minor comes under the fame defcription, would, probably, be a fubject of difpute.

Particular ranks and profeffions of men have likewife characteritical peculiarities which are capable of being placed in a ludicrous view; and Comedy has made frequent ufe of this fource of ridi-, cule. In expofing profeffional, as well as national abfurdities, great illiberality and unfairnefs have been fhewn; both, probably, from the fame caufe; a want of fufficient acquaintance with the whole characters, and taking a judgment of them from a few external circumftances. Yet, upon the whole, good effects may have arifen even from this branch of Comedy; fince, by attacking a profeffion on a fide where it was really weak, the members of it have been made fenfible of,
and have reformed thofe circumftances which rendered them ridiculous. A goodnatured phyfician can never be angry at Moliere's moft laughable exhibitions of the faculty, when he reflects that the follies ridiculed; though exaggerated in the reprefentation, had a real exiftence; and, by being held up to public derifion, have been in a great meafure reformed. The profeffors of law, being neceffarily confined to forms and rules, have hot been able to benefit fo much from the comic ridicule of which they have enjoyed an equally plentiful fhare.

Besides the arrangements which nation and profeffion make of mankind, there are certain natural claffes formed from the diverfities of perfonal character. Although the varieties of temper and difpofition in men are infinite, fo that no two perfons probably ever exifted in whom there
there was an exact conformity, yet there are certain leading features of character which produce a general refemblance among numerous individuals. Thus the proud man, the vain, the fanguine, the fplenetic, the fufpicious, the covetous, the lavifh, and fo forth, are a fort of abftract characters which divide the whole human race amongft them. Now there are, belonging to all thefe, objects of ridicule which it has been the bufinefs of Comedy to exhibit; and though, perhaps, no one individual of each clafs perfectly refembled the perfon held to view on the ftage, yet if all the circumftances exhibited are contained in the general character, it appears fufficiently natural. The Mifer of Moliere is not a picture of any one mifer who ever lived, but of a mifer confidered as forming a clafs of human characters. As thefe general claffes, however, are few in number, they muft be foon exhaufted by the writers of Comedy, who have been obliged, for the fake of variety, to exhibit thofe peculiarities which are more rare and fingular. Hence have been derived many pictures of that character which we call an bumourif; by which is meant a character diftinguifhed by certain ludicrous firgularities from the reft of mankind. The humourift is not without thofe marks of diftinction which he may acquire, like others, from rank, profeffion, or temper of mind; but all thefe are difplayed in him after a manner peculiarly his own, and dafhed with his leading oddities. A love of what is uncommon and out of the way has often occafioned fuch extravagance in the reprefentation of thefe characters as to difguft from their want of probability; but, where a due moderation is obferved, and the peculiarities, though unufual, are fuch as really exift in nature, great entertainment may be derived from their exhibition. Of this kind are the admirable Mifantbrope and Malade Imaginaire of Moliere ; and the Old Bacbelor and Sir Sampfon Legend of Congreve.

tainment

From hence it appears but a fmall gradation to the exhibition of individuals upon the ftage; and yet the difference is important and effential. That which marks out the diftinction between individuals of the fame fpecies is fomething entirely uncommunicable; therefore the rational end of Comedy, which is the reformation of folly, cannot take place in perfonal ridicule; for it will not be alledged that reforming the perfon himfelf is the object. Nor can it fcarcely ever be juft to expofe an individual to the ridicule of the ftage; fince folly, and not vice, being the proper fubject of that ridicule, it is hardly poffible any one can. deferve deferve fo fevere a punifhment. Indeed the expofing of folly can fcarcely be the plea; for all the common, or even the rarer kinds of folly lie open to the attack of Comedy under fictitious characters, by means of which the failing may be ridiculed without the perfon. Perfonal ridicule muft therefore turn, as we find it always has done, upon bodily imperfections, awkward habits, and uncouth geftures; which the low arts of mimickry inhumanly drag forth to public view, for the mean purpofe of exciting prefent merriment. In the beft hands, perfonal Comedy would be a degradation of the ftage, and an unwarrantable feverity; but in the hands it would be likely, if encouraged, to fall into, it would prove an intolerable nuifance. I fhould therefore, without hefitation, join thofe who utterly condemn this fpecies of comic ridicule. It is alfo to be confidered, that the author fhews his talents to difadvantage, and cannot lay any bafis of future fame, in this walk. For the refemblance which depends fo much upon mimickry is loft upon thofe of the audience who are not acquainted with the original, and upon every one who only reads the piece. Mr. Foote's works will aptly exemplify this matter ; in which the fund of genuine Comedy, derived from happy ftrokes upon the manners of the times, and uncommon, but not entirely fingular characters, will fecure a lafting admiration, when the mimickry which fupporred the parts of Squintum and Cadwallader is defpifed or forgotten.

Having thus attempted to trace the different fources of what I conceive the effential part of true Comedy, the ridicule derived from cbarafter, it remains to fay fomewhat of the mixture of ad. ditional ditional matter which it has received as a compofition.

During a confiderable period of modern literature, wit was a commodity in great requeft, and frequently to be met with in all kinds of compofition. It was no where more abundant than in Comedy, the genius of which it appeared peculiarly to fuit, from its gaiety and fatyrical fmartnefs. Accordingly, the language of Comedy was a ftring of repartees, in which a thought was bandied about from one to another, till it was quite run out of breath. This made a fcene pals off with great vivacity; but the misfortune was, that diftinction of character was quite loft in the conteft. Every perfonage, from the lord to the valet, was as witty as the author himfelf; and, provided good things enow were faid, it was no matter from whom they $\mathrm{C}_{2}$ came.
came. Congreve, with the greateft talents for true comic humour, and the delineation of ludicrous characters, was fo overrun with a fondnefs for brilliancy, as frequently to break in upon confiftency. Wit is an admirable ornament of Comedy, and, judicioufly applied, is a high relief to humour, but fhould never interfere with the more effential parts.

We are now, however, happily free from all manner of danger of an inundation of wit. No Congreve arifes to difturb the fententious gravity, and calm fimplicity of modern Comedy. A moralift may congratulate the age on hearing from the theatre compofitions as pure, ferious and delicate, as are given from the pulpit. When we confider how much wit and humour, at the time they were moft prevalent, were perverted to vicious purpoles, we may rejoice at the facrifice; yet we may be allowed to feel a regret at the lofs of an amufement which might, certainly, have been reconciled with innocence; nay, might perhaps have pleaded utility beyond what is fubftituted in its room. Sentimental Comedy, as it is called, contains but very faint difcrimination of character, and fcarcely any thing of ridicule. Its principal aim is to introduce elegant and refined fentiment, particularly of the benevolent caft ; and to move the heart by tender and interefting fituations. Hence they are, in general, much more affecting than our modern Tragedies, which are formed upon nearly the fame plan, but labour under the difadvantage of a formal, ftately ftile, and manners removed too far from the rank of common life. One would not, perhaps, wifh alrogether to banifh from the ftage pieces fo moral and innocent ; yet it is a pity they are not diftinguifhed by fome appropriated name from a thing they fo little. refemble as true Comedy.

I fear, a view of modern manners in other refpects will fcarcely allow us to flatter ourfelves that this change in the theatre chiefly proceeds from improved morality. It may, perhaps, be more juftly attributed to a falfe delicacy of tafte, which renders us unable to bear the reprefentation of low life; and to a real deficiency in genius. With refpect to the firft, genuine Comedy knows no diftinction of rank, but can as heartily enjoy a humourous picture in the common walks of life, where indeed the greateft variety is to be found, as in the moft cultivated and refined. Some have placed the diftinction between Farce and Comedy in the rank from whence the characters are taken; but, I think, very improperly. If there is any real diftinction befides the length length of the pieces, I fhould take it from the different fource of the humour; which in Farce is mere ludicrous incident, but in Comedy, ridiculous character. This criterion, however, will not at all agree with the titles under which each fpecies has already appeared.

As to the other caufe, deficiency of genius, it too plainly appears in many other productions. Cold correctnefs has laid her repreffing hand upon imagination, and damped all her powers. The example of the ancients has been thought to juftify the gravity and fimplicity of modern Comedy. But, great as they were in many qualities of the mind, in thofe of wit and humour they were ftill more defective than even ourfelves in the prefent age. They, who would eagerly catch at a wretched pun, or a meager piece of, plot, were certainly with-held from witti-
cifm

24
cifm and drollery by want of invention, not juftnefs of tafte. I admire, in the pure Latin of Terence, the elegant fenti-. ment, and ftill more the knowledge of the human heart, with which he abounds; but I would not on that account compare his genius, at leaft in Comedy, with Moliere and Congreve.

Lenibus atque utinam feriptis adjuneta foret vis

 ComicaMoral fentiment is the cheapeft product of the mind. Novels, and magazines, and even news-papers, are full of it; but wit and humour threaten to leave us with Chefterfield and Sterne.

Still, however, I would hope the ftate of Comedy is not defperate. The Clandefine Marriage exhibits an example of comic merit, as various and perfect as perhaps any piece in our language. All the fources of ludicrous character have contributed to it. National ridicule appears in Canton, and profeffional in Sterling. Lord Ogleby is an excellent humourit. Mrs. Heidleberg and her niece, befides a comic pettifhnefs of temper, have plenty of fafhionable follies, modified by city vulgarifm. Even the lovers of tender fentiment have their fhare in the entertainment; and I by no means would object to its occafional introduction, when, as it were, offering itfelf from the circumftances. Then, befides Mr. Foote's comic theatre, we have fer veral pieces, which, though ranged under the lift of Farces, contain true and original Comedy. Of thefe we may inftance the Citizen, Polly Honeycomb, the UPbolferer, the Apprentice, and the Oxonian in Town. It is a miftake to fuppofe that the matter of Comedy can ever fail. Though general characters may be exhauted, yet the prevailing follies and fahions

26 ON THE PROVINCE, &C.
fafhions of the times, with the fingularities ftarting up in particular ranks and orders of men, muft conflantly fupply food for the ridicule of the ftage. This is Jawful game; and the purfuit of it is well worthy the encouragement of the public, fo long as it is unattended with the licentioufnefs which difgraced the wit of the laft age. Let ridicule be facred to the interefts of good fenfe and virtue; let it never make a good character lefs refpectable, nor a bad one lefs obnoxious; but let us not refign its ufe to commonplace maxim, and infipid fentiment.

$$
(27)
$$

THE

HILL OF SCIENCE,

A VISION.

IN that feafon of the year when the ferenity of the fky , the various fruits which cover the ground, the difcoloured foliage of the trees, and all the fweet, but fading graces of infpiring autumn, open the mind to benevolence, and difpofe it for contemplation; I was wandering in a beautiful and romantic country, till curiofity began to give way to wearinefs; and I fat me down on the fragment of a rock overgrown with mofs, where the ruftling of the falling leaves, the dafhing of waters, and the hum of the diftant city, foothed my mind into the moft perfect tranquillity, and fleep infenfibly ftole upon me, as I was indulging the agreeable reveries which the objects around me naturally infpired.

I immedrately found myfelf in a vaft extended plain, in the middle of which arofe a mountain higher than I had before any conception of. It was covered with a multitude of people, chiefly youth; many of whom preffed forwards with the livelieft expreffion of ardour in their countenance, though the way was in many places fteep and difficult. I obferved, that thofe who had but juft begun to climb the hill, thought themfelves not far from the top; but as they proceeded, new hills were continually rifing to their view; and the fummit of the higheft highert they could before difcern, feemed but the foot of another, till the mountain at length appeared to lofe itfelf in the clouds. As I was gazing on thefe things with aftonifhment, my good Genius fuddenly appeared. 'The mountain before thee,' faid he, ' is the hill of science. On the top is the temple of Truth, whofe head is above the clouds, and whofe face is covered with a veil of pure light. Obferve the progrefs of her votaries; be filent, and attentive.'

I saw that the only regular approach to the mountain was by a gate, called the gate of languages. It was kept by a woman of a penfive and thoughtful appearance, whofe lips were continually moving, as though fhe repeated fomething to herfelf. Her name was memory. On entering this firft enclofure, I was Atunned with a confufed murmur of jarring voices, and diffonant founds; which increafed creafed upon me to fuch a degree, that I was utterly confounded, and could compare the noife to nothing but the confufion of tongues at Babel. The road was alfo rough and ftony, and rendered more difficult by heaps of rubbifh, continually tumbled down from the higher parts of the mountain; and by broken ruins of ancient buildings, which the travellers were, obliged to climb over at every ftep; infomuch that many, difgufted with fo rough a beginning, turned back, and attempted the mountain no more : while others, having conquered this difficulty, had no fpirits to afcend further, and fitting down on fome fragment of the rubbifh, harangued the multitude below with the greateft marks of importance and felf-complacency.

Abour half way up the hill, 1 obferved on each fide the path a thick foreft covered with continual fogs, and cut out into labyrinths, crofs alleys, and ferpentine walks, entangled with thorns and briars. This was called the wood of error: and I heard the voices of many who were loft up and down in it, calling to one another, and endeavouring in vain to extricate themfelves. The trees in many places fhot their boughs over the path, and a thick mift often refted on it; yet never fo much but that it was difcernable by the light which beamed from the countenance of Truth.

In the pleafantelt part of the mountain were placed the bowers of the Mufes, whofe office it was to cheer the fpirits of the travellers, and encourage their fainting fteps with fongs from their divine harps. Not far from hence were the fields of fiction, filled with a variety of wild flowers fpringing up in the greateft luxuriance, of richer feents and brighter colours
colours than I had obferved in any other climate. And near them was the dark walk of allegory, fo artificially fhaded, that the light at noon-day was never ftronger than that of a bright moonthine. This gave it a pleafingly romantic air for thofe who delighted in contemplation. The paths and alleys were perplexed with intricate windings, and were all terminated with the ftatue of a Grace, a Virtue, or a Mufe.

After I had obferved thefe things, I turned my eyes towards the multitudes who were climbing the fteep afcent, and obferved amongft them a youth of a lively look, a piercing eye, and fomething fiery and irregular in all his motions. His name was genius. He darted like an eagle up the mountain, and left his companions gazing after him with envy and admiration: but his progrefs was unequal;
and interrupted by a thoufand caprices. When Pleafure warbled in the valley, he mingled in lier train. When Pride beckoned towards the precipice, he ventured to the tottering edge. He delighted in devious and untried paths ; and made fo. many excurfions from the road, that his feebler companions often outtripped him. I obferved that the Mufes beheld him with partiality; but Truth often frowzed and turned afide her face. While Genius was thus wafting his ftrength in eccentric flights, I faw a perfon of a very different appearance, named application. , He crept along with a flow and unremitting pace, his eyes fixed on the top of the mountain, patiently removing every ftonethat obftructed his way, till he faw moft of thofe below him who had at firlt derided. his now and toilfome progrefs. Indeed there were few who afcended the hill with equal and uninterrupted fteadinefs; for, befide the difficulties of the way, they were continually folicited to turn afide by a numerous crowd of Appetites, Paffions, and Pleafures, whofe importunity, when they had once complied with, they became lefs and lefs able to refift; and, though they often returned to the path, the afperities of the road were more feverely felt, the hill appeared more fteep and rugged, the fruits which were wholefome and refrefhing, feemed harfh and ill-tafted, their fight grew dim, and their feet tript at every little obftruction.

I SAW, with fome furprize, that the Mufes, whofe bufinefs was to cheer and encourage thofe who were toiling up the afcent, would often fing in the bowers of Pleafure, and accompany thofe who were enticed away at the call of the Paffions. They accompanied them, however, but a little way, and always forfook them when they loft fight of the hill. Their tyrants then doubled their chains upon the unhappy captives, and led them away without refiftance to the cells of Ignorance, or the manfions of Mifery. Amongft the innumerable feducers, who were endeavouring to draw away the votaries of Truth from the path of Science, there was one fo little formidable in her appearance, and fo gentle and languid in her attempts, that I fhould fcarcely have taken notice of her, but for the numbers the had imperceptibly loaded with her chains. Indolence (for fo the was called), far from proceeding to open hoftilities, did not attempt to turn their feet out of the path, but contented herfelf with retarding their progrefs; and the purpofe the could not force them to abandon, fhe perfuaded them to delay. Her touch had a power like that of the Torpedo, which withered the ftrength of thofe who came within its influence. Her unhappy captives ftill turned their faces towards the temple, and always

$$
\mathrm{D}_{2} \quad \text { hoped }
$$

36 the hill of science,
hoped to arrive there ; but the ground feemed to nide from beneath their feet, and they found themfelves at the bottom before they furpected that they had changed their place. The placid ferenity which at firft appeared in their countenance, changed by degrees into a melancholy languor, which was tinged with deeper and deeper gloom as they glided down the Aream of infignificance; a dark and fuggifh water, which is curled by no breeze, and enlivened by no murmur, till it falls into a dead fea, where the fartled paffengers are awakened by the fhock, and the next moment buried in the gulph of oblivion.

Of all the unhappy deferters from the paths of Science, none feemed lefs able to return than the followers of Indolence. The captives of Appetite and Paffion. could often feize the moment when their: tyrants were languid or anfeep to efcape from from their enchantment; but the dominion of Indolence was conftant and unremitted, and feldom refilted till refiftance was in vain.

After contemplating thefe things, I turned my eyes towards the top of the mountain, where the air was always pure and exhilarating, the path fhaded with laurels and other ever-greens, and the effulgence which beamed from the face of the Goddefs feemed to fhed a glory round her votaries. Happy, faid $I$, are they who are permitted to afcend the mountain !-but while I was pronouncing this exclamation with uncommon ardour, I faw ftanding befide me a form of diviner features and a more benign radiance. Happier, faid fhe, are thofe whom virtue conducts to the manfions of Content! - What, faid I, does Virtue then refide in the vale?I am found, faid fhe, in the vale, and D 3 I illumi-

I illuminate the mountain. I cheer the cottager at his toil, and infpire the fage at his meditation. I mingle in the crowd of cities, and blefs the hermit in his cell. I have a temple in every heart that owns my influence ; and to him that wifhes for me I am already prefent. Science may raife you to eminence, but I alone can guide you to felicity! While the Goddefs was thus fpeaking, I ftretched out my arms towards her with a vehemence which broke my flumbers. The chill dews were falling around me, and the fhades of evening ftretched over the landfcape. I haftened homeward, and religned the night to filence and meditation.

( 39 )

$$
0 \mathrm{~N}
$$

$R \quad O \quad M \quad A \quad N \quad C \quad E \quad S$,

AN IMITATION.

OF all the multifarious productions which the efforts of fuperior genus, or the labours of fcholaftic industry; have crowded upon the world, none are perufed with more infatiable avidity, or diffeminated with more univerfal applaufe, than the narrations of feigned events, defcriptions of imaginary fcenes, and delineations of ideal characters. The celebrity of other authors is confined $\mathrm{D}_{4}$, within within very narrow limits. The Geometrician and Divine, the Antiquary and the Critic, however diftinguifhed by uncontefted excellence, can only hope to pleafe thofe whom a çonformity of difpofition has engaged in fimilar purfuits ; and muft be content to be regarded by the reft of the world with the fmile of frigid indifference, or the contemptuous fneer of felf-fufficient folly. The collector of fhells and the anatomift of infects is little inclined to enter into theological difputes: the Divine is not apt to regard with veneration the uncouth diagrams and tedious calculations of the Aftronomer: the man whofe life has been confumed in adjufting the difputes of lexicographers, or elucidating the learning of antiquity, cannot eafily bend his thoughts to recent tranfactions, or readily ineereft himfelf in the unimportant hiftory of his contemporaries : and the

Cit,

Cit, who knows no bufinefs but acquiring wealth, and no pleafure but difplaying it, has' a heart equally fhut up to argument and fancy, to the batteries of fyllogifm, and the arrows of wit. To the writer of fiction alone, every ear is open, and every tongue lavifh of applaufe; curiofity fparkles in every eye, and every bofom is throbbing with concern.

It is, however, eafy to account for this enchantment. To follow the chain of perplexed ratiocination, to view with critical fkill the airy architecture of fyftems, to unravel the web of fophiftry, or weigh the merits of oppofite hypothefes, requires perficacity, and prefuppofes learning. Works of this kind, therefore, are not fo well adapted to the generality of readers as familiar and colloquial compofition; for few can reafon, but all can feel; and many who cannot enter into an argument, may yet liften to a tale. The writer of Romance has even an advantage over thofe who endeavour to amufe by the play of fancy; who, from the fortuitous collifon of diffimilar ideas produce the fcintillations of wit; or by the vivid glow of poetical imagery delight the imagination with colours of ideal radiance. The attraction of the magnet is only exerted upon fimilar particles; and to tafte the beauties of Homer, it is requifite to partake his fire; but every one can relifh the author who reprefents common life, becaufe every one can refer to the originals from whence his ideas were taken. He relates events to which all are liable, and applies to paffions which all have felt. The gloom of folitude, the languor of inaction, the corrofions of difappointment, and the toil of thought, induce men to Atep afide from the rugged road of life, and wander in the fairy land of fiction; where every bank is fprinkled with flowers, and every gale loaded with perfume; where every event introduces a hero, and every cottage is inhabited by a Grace. Invited by thefe flattering fcenes, the ftudent quits the inveftigation of truth, in which he perhaps meets with no lefs fallacy, to exhilarate his mind with new ideas, more agreeable, and more eafily attained: the bufy relax their attention by defultory reading, and fmooth the agitation of a ruffled mind with images. of peace, tranquillity, and pleafure : the idle and the gay relieve the liftleffinefs of leifure, and diverfify the round of life by a rapid feries of events pregnant with rapture and aftonifhment; and the penfive folitary fills up the vacuities of his heart by interefting himfelf in the fortunes of imaginary beings, and forming connections with ideal excellence.

44 ON ROMANCES,

Ir is, indeed, no ways extraordinary that the mind fhould be charmed by fancy, and attracted by pleafure ; but that we fould liften with complacence to the groans of mifery, and delight to view the exacerbations of complicated anguifh, that we fhould choofe to chill the bofom with imaginary fears, and dim the eyes with fictitious forrow, feems a kind of paradox of the heart, and can only be credited becaufe it is univerfally felt. Various are the hypothefes which have been formed to account for the difpofition of the mind to riot in this fpecies of intellectual luxury. Some have imagined that we are induced to acquiefce with greater patience in our own lot, by beholding pictures of life, tinged with deeper horrors, and loaded with more excruciating calamities; as, to a perfon fuddenly emerging. out of a dark room, the fainteft glimmering of twilight affumes a luftre from the contrafted gloom. Others, with yet deeper refinement, fuppofe that we take upon ourfelves this burden of adfcititious forrows, in order to feaft upon the confcioufnefs of our own virtue. We commiferate others, fay they, that we may applaud ourfelves; and the figh of compaffionate fympathy is always followed by the gratulations of felf-complacent efteem. But furely they who would thus reduce the fympathetic emotions of pity to a fyltem of refined felfinnefs, have but ill attended to the genuine feelings of humanity. It would, however, exceed the limits of this paper, fhould I attempt an accurate inveftigation of thefe fentiments. But, let it be remembered, that we are more attracted by thofe fcenes which intereft our paffions, or gratify our curiofity, than thofe which delight our fancy : and, fo far from being indifferent to the miferies of others, we are, at the 46 ON ROMANCES. time, totally regardlefs of our own. And let not thofe on whom the hand of Time has impreffed the characters of oracular wifdom, cenfure with too much acrimony productions which are thus calculated to pleafe the imagination, and intereft the heart. They teach us to think, by inuring us to feel: they ventilate the mind by fudden gufts of paffion ; and prevent the ftagnation of thought, by a frefh infufion of diffimilar ideas.

(47)

$$
\mathrm{S} \quad \mathrm{E} \quad \mathrm{~L} \quad \mathrm{~A} \quad \mathrm{M} \quad \mathrm{~A} \text {; }
$$

A N
IMITATION OF OSSIAN.

WHAT foft voice of forrow is in the breeze? what lovely funbeam of beauty trembling on the rock? Its bright hair is bathed in fhowers; and it looks faint and dim, through its mift on the rufhy plain. Why art thou alone, maid of the mournful look? The cold dropping rain is on the rocks of Torléna - léna, the blaft of the defart lifts thy yellow locks. Leet thy fteps be in the hall of fhells, by the blue winding ftream of Clutha: let the harp tremble beneath thy fingers; and the fons of heroes liften to the mufic of fongs.

Shall my fteps be in the hall of fhells, and the aged low in the duft? The father of Seláma is low behind this rock, on his bed of wither'd leaves: the thiftle's down is ftrewed over him by the wind, and mixes with his grey hair. Thou art fallen, chief of Etha! without thy fame; and there is none to revenge thy death. But thy daughter will fit, pale, befide thee, till fhe finks, a faded flower, upon thy lifelefs form. Leave the maid of Clutha, fon of the ftranger! in the red eye of her tears !

How fell the car-borne Connal, blueeyed mourner of the rock? Mine arm is not weakened in battle; nor my fword withour Its fame.

Connal was a fire in his youth, that lighten'd through fields of renown: but the flame weakly glimmered through grey. athes of age. His courfe was like a ftar moving through the heavens: it walketh in brightnefs, but leaveth no track behind; its filver path cannot be found in the fky. The ftrength of Etha is rolled away like a tale of other years; and his eyes have failed. Feeble and dark, he fits in his hall, and hears the diftant tread of a ftranger's fteps; the haughty fteps of Tonthormo, from the roar of Duvranno's echoing ftream. He ftood in the hall like a pillar of darknefs, on whofe top is the red beam of fire: wide rolled his eyes beneath the gloomy arch of his bent brow; as flames in two caves of a rock, over-hung with the black pine of the de-fart.

E
fart. They had rolled on Seláma, and he afked the daughtet of Connal. Tonthormo! breaker of fhields! thou art a meteor of death in war, whofe fiery hair ftreams on the clouds, and the nations are withered beneath its path. Dwell, Tonthormo! amidft thy hundred hills, and liften to thy torrent's roar; but the foft figh of the virgins is with the chief of Crono; Hidallan is the dream of Se láma, the dweller of her fecret thoughts. A rufhing ftorm in war, a breeze that fighs over the fallen foe; pleafant are thy words of peace, and thy fongs at the mofly brook. Thy fmiles are like the moon-beams trembling on the waves. Thy voice is the gale of fummer that whifpers among the reeds of the lake, and awakens the harp of Moilena with all its lightly-trembling ftrings. Oh that thy calm light was around me! my foul Thould not fear the gloomy chief of Duv-ranno. He came with his ftately fteps. My fhield is before thee, maid of my love! a wall of fhelter from the lightning of fwords. I hey fought. Tonthormo bends in all his pride, before the arm of youth. But a voice was in the breaft of Hidallan, fhall I flay the love of Seláma? Seláma dwells in thy dark bofom, fhall my fteel enter there? Live, thou ftorm of war! He gave again his fword. But, carelels as he ftrode away, rage arofe in the troubled thoughts of the vanquifh'd. He mark'd his time, and fidelong pierced the heart of the generous fon of Semo. His fair hair is fpread on the duft, his eyes are bent on the trembling beam of Clutha. Farewel, light of my foul! They are clofed in darknefs. Feeble waft thou then, my father! and in vain didft thou call for help. Thy grey locks are fcatter'd, as a wreath of fnow on the top of a wither'd trunk; which the boy brufhes away with his ftaff; and carelefs fingeth as he walks. Who fhall defend thee, my daughter ! faid the broken voice of Etha's chief. Fair flower of the defart! the tempeft fhall rufh over thee; and thou fhalt be low beneath the foot of the favage fon of prey. But I will wither, my father, on thy tomb. Weak and alone I dwell amidft my tears, there is no young warrior to lift the fpear, no brother of love! Oh that mine arm were ftrong! I would rufh amidft the battle. Seláma has no friend!

$$
\text { E } 2 \text { which }
$$

> But Seláma has a friend, faid the kindling foul of Reuthamir. I will fight. thy battles, lovely daughter of kings; and the fun of Duvranno fhall fet in blood. But when I return in peace, and the fpirits of thy foes are on my fword, meet me with thy fmiles of love, maid of Clutha!

Clutha ! with thy flow-rolling eyes. Let the foft found of thy fteps be heard in my halls, that the mother of Reuthamir may rejoice. Whence, fhe will fay, is this beam of the diftant land? Thou fhalt dwell in her bofom.

My thoughts are with him who is low in the dutt, fon of Comac! But lift the fpear, thou friend of the unhappy! the light of my foul may return.

He ftrode in his rattling arms. : Tall; in a gloomy foreft, flood the furly furength of Duvranno. Gleaming behind the dark trees was his broad fhield; like the moon when it rifes in blood, and the dufky clouds fail low, and heavy, athwart its path. Thoughts, like the troubled ocean, ruh'd over his foul, and he ftruck, with his fpear, the founding pine. Starting, he mix'd in battle E. 3 with with the chief of: woody Morna. Long was the ftrife of arms; and the giant fons of the foreft trembled at their ftrokes. At length Tonthormo fell-The fword of Reuthamir wav'd, a blue flame, around him. He bites the ground in rage. His blood is poured, a dark red ftream, into Oithona's trembling waves. Joy brighten'd in the foul of Reuthamir; when a young warrior came, with his forward fpear. He moved in the light of beauty; but his words were haughty and fierce. Is Tonthormo fallen in blood, the friend of my early years? Die, thou dark-foul'd chief! for never fhall Seláma be thine, the maid of his love. Lovely fhone her eyes, through tears, in the hall of her grief, when I ftood by the chief of Duvranno, in the rifing ftrife of Clutha.

Retire, thou fwelling voice of pride ! thy thy fpear is light as the taper reed. Pierce the roes of the defart; and call the hunter to the feaft of fongs, but fpeak not of the daughter of Connal, fon of the feeble arm! Seláma is the love of heroes.

Try thy ftrength with the feeble arm, faid the rifing pride of youth. Thou fhalt vanifh like a cloud of mift before the fun, when he looks abroad in the power of his brightnefs, and the ftorms are rolled away from before his face.

But thou thyfelf didft fall before Reuthamir, in all thy boafting words. As a tall afh of the mountain, when the tempeft takes its green head and lays it level on the plain.

Come from thy fecret cave, Seláma! thy foes are filent and dark. Thou dove that hideft in the clefts of the rocks! the florm is over and paft. Come from thy rock, Seláma! and give thy white hand to the chief who never fled from the face of glory, in all its terrible brightnefs.

$$
\text { E } 4 \text { ftorm }
$$

- She gave her hand, but it was trembling and cold, for the fpear was deep in her fide. Red, beneath her mail, the current of crimfon wandered down her white breaft, as the track of blood on Cromla's mountains of fnow, when the wounded deer flowly croffes the heath, and the hunters cries are in the breeze. Bleft be the fpear of Reuthamir! faid the faint voice of the lovely, I feel it cold in my heart. Lay me by the fon of $\mathrm{Se}-$ mo. Why fhould I know another love? Raife the tomb of the aged, his thin form fhall rejoice, as he fails on a low-hung cloud, and guides the wintry ftorm. O pen' your airy halls, firits of my love!

And have I quench'd the light which was pleafant to my foul? faid the chief of Morna. My fteps moved in darknefs, why were the words of itrife in thy tale? Sorrow, like a cloud, comes over, my foul, and fhades the joy of mighty deeds. Soft be your reft in the narrow houfe, children of grief! The breeze in the long whiftling grafs fhall not awaken you. The tempeft fhall rufh over you, and the bulrufh bow its head upon your. tomb, but filence fhall dweil in your habitation; long repofe, and the peace of years to come. The voice of the bard fhall raife your remembrance in the diftant land, and mingle your tale of woe with the murmur of other ftreams. Often fhall the harp fend forth a mournful found, and the tear dwell in the foft eyes of the daughters of Morna.

Such were the words of Reuthamir, while while he raifed the tombs of the fallen. Sad were his fteps towards the towers of his fathers, as mufing he crofs'd the dark heath of Lena, and ftruck, at times, the thiftle's beard.

AGAINST

```
AGAINST INCONSISTENCY IN OUR EXPECTATIONS.
```

"What is more reafonable, than that " they who take pains for any thing, " fhould get moft in that particular " for which they take pains? They " have taken pains for power, you for " right principles; they for riches, you "for a proper ufe of the appearances " of things: fee whether they have the " advantage of you in that for which " you have taken pains, and which" they neglect: If they are in power, " and you not, why will not you fpeak " the
" the truth to yourfelf, that you do
" nothing for the fake of power, but " that they do every thing? No, but
" fince I take care to have right prin"ciples, it is more reafonable that I " fhould have power. Yes, in refpect
" to what you take care about, your "principles. But give up to others
" the things in which they have taken
" more care than you. Elfe it is juft
" as if, becaufe you have right prin" "ciples, you fhould think it fit that
" when you fhoot an arrow, you fhould " hit the mark better than an archer,
" or that you fhould forge better thian " a fmith."

Carter's Epictetus.

As moft of the unhappinefs in the world arifes rather from difappointed defires, than from pofitive evil, it is of the utmoft confequence to attain juft notions of the laws and order of the univerfe, that we may not vex ourfelves with fruitlefs wifhes, or give way to groundlefs and unreafonable difcontent. The laws of natural philofophy, indeed; are tolerably underftood and attended to ; and though we may fuffer inconveniences, we are feldom difappointed in confequence of them. No man expects to preferve orangetrees in the open air through an Englifh winter; or when he has planted an acorn, to fee it become a large oak in a few months. The mind of man naturally yields to neceflity; and our wifhes foon fubfide when we fee the impoffibility of their being gratified. Now, upon an accurate infpection, we fhall find, in the moral government of the world, and the order of the intellectual fyftem, laws as determinate fixed and invariable as any in Newton's Principia. The procrefs of vegetation is not more certain than the jrowth of habit ; nor is the power of attraction more clearly proved than the force of affection or the influence of example. The man therefore who has well fudied the operations of nature in mind as well as matter, will acquire a certain moderation and equity in his claims upon Providence. He never will be difappointed either in himfelf or others. He will act with precifion; and expect that effect and that alone from his efforts, which they are naturally adapted to produce. For want of this, men of merit and integrity often cenfure the difpofitions of Providence for fuffering characters they defpife to run away with advantages which, they yet know, are purchafed by fuch means as a high and noble fpirit could never fubmit to. If you refufe to pay the price, why expect the purchafe? We fhould confider this world as a great mart of commerce, where fortune expofes to our view view various commodities, riches, eafe, tranquillity, fame, integrity, knowledge. Every thing is marked at a fettled price. Our time, our labour, our ingenuity, is fo much ready money. which we are to lay out to the beft advantage. Examine, compare, choofe, reject; but ftand to your own judgment; and do not, like children, when you have purchafed one thing, repine that you do not poffefs another which you did not purchafe. Such is the force of well-regulated induftry, that a fteady and vigorous exertion of our faculties, directed to one end, will generally infure fuccefs. Would you, for inftance, be rich ? Do you think that fingle point worth the facrificing every thing elfe to ? You may then be rich. Thoufands have become fo from the loweft be * ginnings by toil, and patient diligence, and attention to the minuteft articles of expence and profit. But you mult give up the pleafures of leifure, of a vacant mind; of a free unfufpicious temper. If you preferve your integrity, it mult be a coarfe-fpun and vulgar honefty. Thofe high and lofty notions of morals which you brought with you from the fchools muft be confiderably lowered, and mixed with the bafer alloy of a jealous and wordly-minded prudence. You mutt learn to do hard, if not unjuft things ; and for the nice embarraffinents of a delicate and ingenuous fpirit, it is neceffary for you to get rid of them as faft as poffible. You mult fhut your heart againft the Mufes, and be content to feed your underftanding with plain, houfhold truths. In fhort; you muft not attempt to enlarge your ideas, or polifh your tafte, or refine you fentiments; but muft keep on in one beaten track, without turning afide either to the right hand or to the left. "But I cannot fubmit to drudgery like this -I feel a fpirit above it."' 'Tis well : be above it then; only do not repine that you are not rich.

Is knowledge the pearl of peace? That too may be purchafed - by fteady application, and long folitary hours of ftudy and reflection. Beftow thefe, and you fhall be wife. "But (fays the man of letters) what a hardfhip is it that many an illiterate fellow who cannot conftrue the motto of the arms on his coach, fhall raife a fortune and make a figure, while I have little more than the common conveniences of life." Et tibi magna fatis!-Was it in order to raife a fortune that you confumed the fprightly hours of youth in ftudy and retirement? Was it to be rich that you grew pale over the midnight lamp, and diftilled the fweetnefs from the Greek and Roman fpring? You have then miftaken your path, and ill employed your induftry. "What reward have I then for all my labours?" What reward! A large comprehenfive foul, well purged from vulgar fears, and perturbations, and prejudices; able to comprehend and interpret the works of man -of God. A rich, flourifhing, cultivated mind, pregnant with inexhauftible ftores of entertainment and reflection. A perpetual fpring of frefh ideas; and the confcious dignity of fuperior intelligence. Good heaven! and what reward can you afk befides?
F employed
"But is it not fome reproach upon the œconomy of Providence that fuch a one, who is a mean dirty fellow, fhould have amaffed wealth enough to buy half a nation ?" Not in the leaft. He made himfelf a mean dirty fellow for that very end. He has paid his health, his confcience, his liberty for it; and will you envy him his bargain? Will you hang your head and blufh in his prefence becaufe he outhines you in equipage and fhow? Lift up your brow with a noble confidence, and fay to yourfelf, I have not thefe things, it is true ; but it is becaufe I have not fought, becaufe I have not defired them ; it is becaufe I poffefs fomething better. I have chofen my lot. I am content and fatisfied.

You are a modeft man-You love quiet and independence, and have a delicacy and referve in your temper which renders it impoffible for you to elbow your way in the world, and be the herald of your own merits. Be content then with a modeft retirement, with the efteem of your intimate friends, with the praifes of a blamelefs heart, and a delicate ingenuous fpirit; but refign the fplendid diftinctions of the world to thofe who can better fcramble for them.

The man whofe tender fenfibility of confcience and ftrict regard to the rules of morality makes him fcrupulous and fearful of offending, is often heard to complain of the difadvantages he lies under in every path of honour and profit. " Could I but get over fome nice points, and conform to the practice and opinion of thofe about me, I might ftand as fair a chance as others for dignities and preferment." And why can you not? What hinders you from difcarding this troublefome fcrupulofity of yours which ftands fo grievounly in your way? If it be a finall thing to enjoy a healthful mind, found at the very core, that does not fhrink from the keeneft infpection; inward freedom from remorfe and perturbation; unfullied whitenefs and fimplicity of manners; a genuine integrity

Pure in the laft receffes of the mind;
if you think thefe advantages an inadequate
quate recompence for what you refign, difmifs your fcruples this inftant, and be a nave-merchant, a parafite, or-what you pleafe.

If there be motives weak, break off betimes; and as you have not fpirit to affert the dignity of virtue, be wife enough not to forego the emoluments of vice.

I Much admire the fpirit of the ancient philofophers, in that they never attempted, as our moralifts often do, to lower the tone of philofophy, and make it confiftent with all the indulgences of indolence and fenfuality. They never thought of having the bulk of mankind for their difciples; but kept themfelves as diftinet as poffible from a worldly life. They plainly told men what facrifices were required, and what advantages they were which might be expected.

Si virtus hoc una poteft dare, fortis omiffis Hoc age deliciis

If you would be a philofopher thefe are the terms. You muft do thus and thus: There is no other way. If not, go and be one of the vulgar.

There is no one quality gives fo much dignity to a character as confiftency of conduct. Even if a man's purfuits be wrong and unjuftifiable, yet if they are profecuted with fteadinefs and vigour, we cannot withhold our admiration. The moft characteriftic mark of a great mind is to choofe fome one important object, and purfue it through life. It was this made Cæfar a great man. His object was ambition; he purfued it fteadily, and was always ready to facrifice to it every interfering paffion or inclination.

There is a pretty paffage in one of Lucian's dialogues, where Jupiter complains to Cupid that though he has had fo many intrigues, he was never fincerely beloved. In order to be loved, fays Cu pid, you muft lay afide your ægis and your thunder-bolts, and you muft curl and perfume your hair, and place a garland on your head, and walk with a foft ftep, and aflume a winning obfequious deportment. But, replied Jupiter, I am not willing to refign fo much of my dignity. Then, returns Cupid, leave off defiring to be loved-He wanted to be Jupiter and Adonis at the fame time.

It muft be confeffed, that men of genius are of all others moft inclined to make thefe unreafonable claims. As their relifh for enjoyment is ftrong; their views large and comprehenfive, and they feel themfelves lifted above the common bulk of mankind, they are apt to flight that natural reward of praife and admiration which is ever largely paid to diftinguifhed abilties; and to expect to be called forth to public notice and favour : without confidering that their talents are commonly very unfit for active life; that their eccentricity and turn for fpeculation difqualifies them for the bufinefs of the world, which is beft carried on by men of moderate genius; and that fociety is not obliged to reward any one who is not. ufeful to it. The Poets have been a very unreafonable race, and have often complained loudly of, the neglect of genius and the ingratitude of the age. The tender and penfive Cowley, and the elegant Shenftone, had their minds tinetured by this difcontent; and even the fublime melancholy of Young was too much owing to the ftings of difappointed ambition.

$$
\mathrm{F}_{4} \quad \text { which }
$$

The moderation we have been endeavouring vouring to inculcate will likewife prevent much mortification and difguft in our commerce with mankind. As we ought not to wifh in ourfelves, fo neither fhould we expect in our friends contrary qualifications. Young and fanguine, when we enter the world, and feel our affections drawn forth by any particular excellence in a character, we immediately give it credit for all others; and are beyond meafure difgufted when we come to difcover, as we foon muft difcover, the defects in the other fide of the balance. But nature is much more frugal than to heap together all manner of fhining qualities in one glaring mals. Like a judicious painter fhe endeavours to preferve a certain unity of ftile and colouring in her pieces. Models of abfolute perfection are only to be met with in romance; where exquifite beauty and brilliant wit, and profound juidgment, and immaculate virtue, are all blended

74 AGAINST INCONSISTENCY
blended together to adorn fome favourite character. As an anatomift knows that the racer cannot have the ftrength and mufcles of the draught-horfe; and that winged men, gryffons, and mermaids muft be mere creatures of the imagination; fo the philofopher is fenfible that there are combinations of moral qualities which never can take place but in idea. There is a different air and complexion in characters as well as in faces, though perhaps each equally beautiful; and the excellencies of one cannot be transferred to the other. . Thus if one man poffeffes a ftoical apathy of foul, acts independent of the opinion of the world, and fulfils every duty with mathematical exactnefs, you mult not expect that man to be greatly influenced by the weaknefs of pity, or the partialities of friendfhip: you muft not be offended that he does not lly to meet you after a fhort abfence;
or require from him the convivial fpirit and honeft effufions of a warm, open, fufceptible heart. If another is remarkable for a lively active zeal, inflexible integrity, a ftrong indignation againft vice, and freedom in reproving it, he will probably have fome little bluntnefs in his addrefs not altogether fuitable to polifhed life; he will want the winning arts of converfation; he will difguft by a kind of haughtinefs and negligence in his manner, and often hurt the delicacy of his acquaintance with harh and difagreeable truths.

We ufually fay-that man is a genius; but he has fome whims and odditiesfuch a one has a very general knowledge, but he is fuperficial; &c. Now in all fuch cafes we fhould fpeak more rationally did we fubltitute therefore for but.

He is a genius, therefore he is whimfical; and the like.

Ir is the fault of the prefent age, owing to the freer commerce that different ranks and profeffions now enjoy with each other, that characters are not marked with fufficient ftrength : the feveral claffes run too much into one another. We bave fewer pedants, it is true, but we have fewer ftriking originals. Every. one is expected to have fuch a tincture f general knowledge as is incompatible with going deep into any fcience; and fucly a conformity to fafhionable manners as checks the free workingsof the ruling paffion, and gives an infipid famenefs to the face of fociety, under the idea of polifh and regularity.

There is a caft of manners peculiar and becoming to each age, fex, and profeffion;
feffion; one, therefore, fhould not throw out illiberal and common-place cenfures againft another. Each is perfect in its kind. A woman as a woman: a tradefman as a tradefman. We are often hurt by the brutality and nuggih conceptions of the vulgar; not confidering that fome there muft be to be hewers of wood and drawers of water, and that cultivated genius, or even any great refinement and delicacy in their moral feelings, would be a real misfortune to them.

Let us then ftudy the philofophy of the human mind. The man who is mafter of this fcience, will know what to expect from every one. From this man, wife advice; from that, cordial fympathy; from another, cafual entertainment. The paffions and inclinations of others are his tools, which he can ufe

78 AGAINST INCONSISTENCY.
with as much precifion as he would the mechanical powers; and he can as readily make allowance for the workings of vanity, or the bias of felf-intereft in his friends, as for the power of friction, or the irregularities of the needle.

( 79 )

T/HE

CANAL AND THE BROOK.

An APOLOGUE.

A DELIGHTFULLY pleafantevening fucceeding a fultry fummer-day, invited me to take a folitary walk; and leaving the duft of the highway, I fell into a path which led along a pleafant little valley watered by a frall meandering brook. The meadow-ground on its banks had been lately mown, and the new grafs

SO THE CANAL AND THE BROOK.
was fpringing up with a lively verdure. The brook was hid in feveral places by fhrubs that grew on each fide, and intermingled their branches. The fides of the valley were roughened by finall irregular thickets; and the whole fcene had an air of folitude and retirement, uncommon in the neighbourhood of a populous town. The Duke of Bridgewater's canal croffed the valley, high raifed on a mound of earth, which preferved a level with the elevated ground on each fide. An arched road was carried under it, beneath which the brook that ran along the valley was conveyed by a fubterraneous paffage. I threw myfelf upon a green bank, fhaded by a leafy thicket, and refting my head upon my hand, after a welcome indolence had overcome my fenfes, I faw, with the eyes of fancy, the following fcene.

The firm-built fide of the aqueduct fuddenly fuddenly opened, and a gigantic form iffued forth, which I foon difcovered to be the Genius of the Canal. He was clad in a clofe garment of a ruffet hue. A mural crown, indented with battlements, furrounded his brow. His naked feet were difcoloured with clay. On his left fhoulder he bore a huge pick-ax; and in his right hand he held certain inftruments, ufed in furveying and levelling. His looks were thoughtful, and his features harfh. The breach through which he proceeded, inftantly clofed; and with a heavy tread he advanced into the valley. As he approached the brook, the Deity of the Stream arofe to meet him. He was habited in a light green mantle, and the clear drops fell from his dark hair, which was encircled with a wreath of water lily, interwoven with fweet feented flag. An angling rod fupported his fteps. The Genius of the Canal eyed him with a contemptuous look, and in a hoarfe voice thus began:
" Hence, ignoble rill! with thy fcanty " tribute to thy lord, the Merfey; nor " thus wafte thy almoft exhaufted urn in " lingering windings along the vale. " Feeble as thine aid is, it will not be " unacceptable to that mafter ftream " himfelf; for, as I lately croffed his " channel, I perceived his fands loaded " with ftranded veffels. I faw, and pitied " him, for undertaking a tafk to which "s he is unequal. But thou, whofe languid " current is obfcured by weeds, and in-. " terrupted by mifhapen pebbles; who " lofeft thyfelf in endlefs mazes, remote " from any found, but thy own idle " gurgling; how canit thou fupport an " exiftence fo contemptible and ufelefs? "For me, the nobleft child of art, who " hold my unremitting courfe from hill.
ri' to hill; over vales and rivers; who "p pierce the folid rock for my paffage, " and connect unknown lands with " diftant feas; wherever I appear I am "s viewed with aftonifhment, and exulting "commerce hails my waves. . Behold
" my channel thronged with capacious " veffels for the conveyance of mer" chandife, and fplendid barges for the "ufe and pleafure of travellers; my " banks crowned with airy bridges and " huge warehoufes, and echoing with " the bufy founds of induftry. Pay then " the homage due from floth and ob"f furity to grandeur and utility."
"I readily acknowledge," replied the Deity of the Brook, in a modeft accent, " the fuperior magnificence and " more extenfive utility of which you fo " proudly boaft; yet, in my humble walk, "I am not void of a praife, lefs fhining, G 2 " but
"but not lefs folid than yours. The " nymph of this peaceful valley, ren"dered more fertile and beautiful by my "ftream; the neighbouring fylvan deities, " to whofe pleafure I contribute, will " pay a grateful teftimony to my merit. " The windings of my courfe, which you " fo much blame, ferve to diffufe over a " greater extent of ground the refrefh" ment of my waters; and the lovers of " nature and the Mufes, who are fond of " ftraying on my banks, are better pleafed " that the line of beauty marks my way, "r than if, like yours, it were directed in a "ftraight, unvaried line. They prize the " irregular wildnefs with which I am " decked, as the charms of beauteous fim" plicity. What you call the weeds which " darken and obfcure my waves, afford «s to the botanift a pleafing fpeculation of " the works of nature; and the poet and "painter think the luftre of my fream
" greatly improved by glittering through " them. The pebbles which diverfify " my bottom, and make thefe ripplings ax in my current, are pleafing objects to " the eye of tafte; and my fimple mur" murs are more melodious to the learned "ear, than all the rude noifes of your "banks, or even the mufic that refounds "from your ftately barges. If the un"feeling fons of wealth and commerce " judge of me by the mere ftandard of ${ }^{\text {sc }}$. ufefulners, I may claim no undiftin" guifhed rank. While your waters, con" fined in deep channels, or lifted above "the valleys, roll on, a ufelefs burden to "the fields, and only fubfervient to the "s drudgery of bearing temporary mer"chandifes, my ftream will beftow un" varying fertility on the meadows, du"ring the fummers of future ages. Yet "I fcorn to fubmit my honours to the "decifion of thofe, whofe hearts are fhut

$$
G_{3} \quad \text { up }
$$

"up to tafte and fentiment. Let me ap*. "peal to nobler judges. The philofopher " and poet, by whofe labours the human " mind is elevated and refined, and "opened to pleafures beyond the con"ception of vulgar fouls, will acknow" ledge that the elegant deities who pre" fide over fimple and natural beauty, 'have infpired them with their charm" ing and inftructive ideas. The fweeteft " and moft majeftic bard that ever fung, " has taken a pride in owning his af" fection to woods and ftreams; and "while the ftupendous monuments of "Roman grandeur, the columns which "pierced the fkies, and the aqueducts " which poured their waves over moun" tains and valleys, are funk in oblivion, " the gently winding Mincius ftill re"tains his tranquil honours. And when "thy glories, proud Genius ! are loft and "forgotten; when the flood of com" merce,
" merce, which now fupplies thy urn, is "turned into another courfe, and has "left thy channel dry and defolate; the "foftly-flowing Avon fhall ftill murmur "in fong, and his banks receive the " homage of all who are beloved by "Phœbus and the Mufes."

```
i* (88)
    ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.
```

I Happened the other day to take a folitary walk amongft the venerable ruins of an old Abbey. The ftillnefs and folemnity of the place were favourable to thought, and naturally led me to. a train of ideas relative to the fcene ; when, like a good proteftant, I began to indulge a fecret triumph in the ruin of fo many ftructures which I had always confidered fidered as the haunts of ignorance and fupertition.

Ye are fallen, faid I, se dark and gloomy manfions of miftaken zeal, where the proud prieft and lazy monk fattened upon the riches of the land, and crept like vermin from their cells to fpread their poifonous doctrines through the nation, and difturb the peace of kings. Obfcure in their origin, but daring and ambitious in their guilt! See how the pure light of heaven is clouded by the dim glafs of the arched window, ftained with the gaudy colours of monkifh tales and legendary fiction; fit emblem how reluctantly they admitted the fairer light of truth amidft thefe dark receffes, and how much they have debafect its genuine luftre! The low cells, the long and narrow aifles, the gloomy arches, the damp and fecret caverns which wind beneath
neath the hollow ground, far from imprefling on the mind the idea of the God of truth and love, feem only fit for thofe dark places of the earth in which are the habitations of cruelty. Thefe maffy ftones and feattered reliques of the vaft edifice, like the large bones and gigantic armour of a once formidable ruffian, produce emotions of mingled dread and exultation. Farewel, ye once venerated feats! enough of you remains, and may it always remain, to remind us from what we have efcaped, and make pofterity for ever thankful for this fairer age of liberty and light.

Such were for a while my meditations; but it is cruel to infult a fallen enemy, and I gradually fell into a different train of thought. I began to confider whether fomething might not be advanced in favour of thefe inftitutions during the barbarous barous ages in which they flourifhed; and though they have been productive of much mifchief and fuperftition, whether they might not have fpread the glimmering of a feeble ray of knowledge, through that thick night which once involved the weftern hemifphere.

And where, indeed, could the precious remains of claffical learning, and the divine monuments of ancient taft, have been fafely lodged amidft the ravages of that age of ferocity and rapine which fucceeded the defolation of the Roman empire, except in fanctuaries like thefe, confecrated by the fuperfition of the times beyond their intrinfic merit? The frequency of wars, and the licentious cruelty with which they were conducted, left neither the hamlet of the peafant nor the caftle of the baron free from depredation; but the church and monaftery generally remained remained inviolate. There Homer and Ariftotle were obliged to fhroud their heads from the rage of gothic ignorance ; and there the facred records of divine truth were preferved, like treafure hid in the earth in troublefome times, fafe, but unenjoyed. Some of the barbarous nations were converted before their conquefts, and moft of them foon after their fettlement in the countries they over-ran. Thofe buildings which their new faith taught them to venerate, afforded a fhelter for thofe valuable manufcripts, which muft orherwife have been deftroyed in the common wreck. At the revival of learning, they were produced from their dormitories. A copy of the pandect of Juftinian, that valuable remain of Roman law, which firft gave to Europe the idea of a more perfect jurifprudence, and gave men a relifh for a new and important Itudy, was difcovered in a monaftery of Amalphi.

92 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

Amalphi. Moft of the claffics were recovered by the fame means; and to this it is owing, to the books and learning preferved in thefe repofitories, that we were not obliged to begin anew, and trace every art by flow and uncertain fteps from its firt origin. Science, already full grown and vigorous, awaked as from 2 trance, fhook her pinions, and foon foared to the heights of knowledge.

Nor was fhe entirely idle during her recefs; at leaft we cannot but confefs that what little learning remained in the world was amongtt the priefts and religious orders. Books, before the invention of paper, and the art of printing, were fo dear, that few private perfons poffeffed any. The only libraries were in convents; and the monks were often employed in tranfcribing manufcripts, which was a very tedious, and at that time a very neceffary tafk. It was fre quently enjoined as a penance for fome night offence, or given as an exercife to the younger part of the community. The monks were obliged by their rules to fpend fome ftated hours every day in reading and ftudy; nor was any one to be chofen abbot without a competent fhare of learning. They were the only hiftorians; and though their accounts be interwoven with many a legendary tale, and darkened by much fuperfition, ftill they are better than no hiftories at all ; and we cannot but think ourfelves obliged to them for tranfmitting to us, in any drefs, the annals of their country.

94 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS。

They were likewife almof the fole inftructors of youth. Towards the end of the tenth century, there were no fchools in Europe but the monafteries, and thofe which belonged to epifcopal refidences;
nor any mafters but the Benedictines. It ${ }^{\prime}$ is true, their courfe of education extended no further than what they called the feven liberal arts, and thefe were taught in a very dry and uninterefting manner. But this was the genius of the age, and it fhould not be imputed to them as a reproach that they did not teach well, when no one taught better.' We are guilty of great unfairnefs when we compare the fchool-men with the philofophers of a more enlightened age : we fhould contraft them with thofe of their own times; with a high-conitable of France who could not read; with kings who made the fign of the crofs in confirmation of their charters, becaufe they could not write tweir names; with a whole people without the leaft glimmering of tafte or literature. Whatever was their real knowledge, there was a much greater difference between men of learning, and the bulk of the nation, at that time, than there is at prefent ; and certainly, fome of the difciples of thofe fchools who, though now fallen into difrepute, were revered in their day by the names of the fubtle, or the angelic doctors, fhewed an acutenefs and ftrength of genius, which, if properly directed, would have gone far in philofophy ; and they only failed becaufe their enquiries were not the objects of the human powers. Had they exercifed half that acutenefs on facts and experiments, they had been truly great men: However, there were not wanting fome, even in the darkeft ages; whofe names will be always remembered with pleafure by the lovers of fcience. Alcuin, the preceptor of Charlemagne, the firft who introduced a tafte for polite literature into France, and the chief inftrument that prince made ufe of in his noble endeavours for the encouragement of learning; to whom the univerfities of © Soiffons,

Soiffons, Tours and Paris owe their origin : the hiftorians, Mathew Paris, William of Malmfbury; Savanarola; the elegant and unfortunate Abelard; and, to crown the reft, the Englifh Francifcan, Roger Bacon.

It may be here obferved, that forbiding the vulgar tongue in the offices of devotion, and in reading the fcriptures, though undoubtedly a great corruption in the Chriftian Church, was of infinite fervice to the interefts of learning. When the ecclefiaftics had locked up their religion in a foreign tongue, they would take care not to lofe the key. This gave an importance to the learned languages; and every fcholar could not only read, but wrote and difputed in Latin, which without fuch a motive would probably have been no more ftudied than the Chinefe. And at a time when the modern lanH $\quad$ guages guages of Europe were yet unformed and barbarous, Latin was of great ufe as a kind of univerfal tongue, by which learned men might converf and correfpond with each other.

98 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

Indeed the monks were almoft the only fet of men who had leifure or opportunity to pay the leaft attention to literary fubjects. A learned education (and a very little went to that title) was reckoned peculiar to the religious. It was almoft efteemed a blemifh on the favage and martial character of the gentry, to have any tincture of letters: A man, therefore, of a ftudious and retired turn, avierfe to quarrels, and not defirous of the fierce and fanguinary glory of thofe times, beheld in the cloifter a peaceful and honourable fanctuary; where, without the reproach of cowardice, or danger of invafion, he might devote himfelf to learning; affociate with men of his own turn, and have free accefs to libraries and. manufcripts, In this enlightened and polifhed age, where learning is diffufed through every rank, and many a merchant's clerk poffeffes more real knowledge than half the literati of that æra, we can fcarcely conceive how grofs an ignorance overfpread thofe times, and how totally all ufeful learning might have. been loft amongft us, had it not been for an order of men, vefted with peculiar privileges, and protected by even a fuperftitious degree of reverence.

Thus the Mufes, with their attendant arts, in ftrange difguife indeed; and uncouth trappings, took refuge in the peaceful gloom of the convent. Statuary carved a madonna or a crucifix; Painting illuminated a miffal; Eloquence made the panegyric of a faint; and Hiftory com$\mathrm{H}_{2}$ pofed and were ready, at any happier period, to emerge from obfcurity with all their native charms and undiminifhed luftre.

But there were other views in which thofe who devoted themfelves to a monaftic life might be fuppofed ufeful to fociety. They were often employed either in cultivating their gardens, or in curious mechanical works; as indeed the nuns are ftill famous for many elegant and ingenious manufactures. By the conftant communication they had with thofe of their own order, and with their common head at Rome, they maintained fome intercourfe between nations at a time when travelling was dangerous, and commérce had not, as now, made the moft diftant parts of the globe familiar to each other: and they kept up a more intimate bond of union amongtt learned men of all countries,

ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS IOA

tries, who would otherwife have been fecluded from all knowledge of each other. A monk might travel with more convenience than any one elfe; his perfon was fafer, and he was fure of meeting with proper accommodations. The intercourfe with Rome muft have been peculiarly favourable to thefe northern nations; as Jtaly for a long time led the way in every improvement of politenefs or literature: and if we imported their fuperftition, we likewife imported theirmanufactures, their knowledge, and their tafte. Thus Alfred fent for Italian monks, when he wanted to civilize his people, and introduce amongtt them fome tincture of letters. It may, likewife be prefumed that they tempered the rigour of monarchy. Indeed they, as well as the fovereigns, endeavoured to ennave the people; but fubjection was not likely to be fo abject and unlimited where the object of it was divided, and each

IO2 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.
each fhowed by turns that the other might be oppofed. It muft have been of fervice to the caufe of liberty to have a fet of men, whofe laws, privileges, and immunities the moft daring kings were afraid to trample on ; and this, before a more enlightened fpirit of freedom had arifen, might have its effect in preventing the ftates of chriftendom from falling into fuch entire flavery as the Afiatics,

Such an order would in fome degree check the exceffive regard paid to birth. A man of mean origin and obfcure parentage faw himfelf excluded from almoft every path of fecular preferment, and almoft treated as a being of an inferior feecies by the high and haughty fpirit of the gentry; but he was at liberty to afpire to the higheft dignities of the church; and there have been many who, like Sextus V. and cardinal Wolfey, have by their induftry
induftry and perfonal merit alone raifed themfelves to a level with kings.

Ir fhould likewife be remembered that many of the orders were charitable inftitutions; as the knigbts of faitb and cbarity in the thirteenth century, who were affociated for the purpofe of fuppreffing thofe bands of robbers which infefted the public roads in France; the bretbren of the order of the redemption, for redeeming flaves from the Mahometans; the order of St. Anthony, firft eftablifhed for the relief of the poor under certain diforders; and the bretbren and fitters of the pious and chriftian Jchools, for educating poor children. Thefe fupplied the place of hofpitals and other fuch foundations, which are now eftablifhed on the broader bafis of public benevolence. To bind up the wounds of the ftranger, was peculiarly the office of the inhabitants of

$$
\mathrm{H}_{4}
$$

IO4 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS ?
the convent; and they often fhared the charities they received. The exercife; of hofpitality is ftill their characteriftic, and muft have been of particular ufe formerly, when there were not the conveniences and accommodations for travelling which we nowenjoy. Thelearned ftranger was always fure of an agreeable refidence amongft them; and as they all underfood Latin, they ferved him for interpreters, and introduced him to a fight of whatever was curious or valuable in the countries which he vifited. They checked the fpirit of favage fiercenefs, to which our warlike anceftors were fo prone, with the mildnels and fanctity of religious influences; they preferved fome refpect to law and order, and often decided controverfies by means lefs bloody than the fword, though confeffedly more fuperftitious.

A PROOF that thefe inftitutions had a favourable

$$
\text { ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS. } 105
$$

favourable afpect towards civilization, may be drawn from a late hiftory of Ireland. "Soon after the introduction of " chriftianity into that kingdom," fays Dr. Leland, "the monks fixed their ha" bitations in defarts, which they culti" vated with their own hands, and ren" dered the moft delightful fpots in the " kingdom. Thefe defarts became well " policed cities, and it is remarkable " enough, that to the monks we owe fo "ufeful an inftitution in Ireland as the " bringing great numbers together into " one civil community. In thefe cities " the monks fet up fchools, and taught, " not only the youth of Ireland, but " the neighbouring nations; furnifhing " them alfo with books. They became " umpires between contending chiefs, " and when they could not confine them " within the bounds of reafon and reliis gion, at leaft terrified them by denoun-

106 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

is cing divine vengeance againft their " exceffes,"

Ler it be confidered too, that when the minds of men began to open, fome of the moft eminent reformers fprung from the bofom of the church, and even of the convent. It was not the laity who began to think. The ecclefiaftics were the firt to perceive the errors they had introduced. The church was reformed from within, not from without; and like the filk-worm, when ripened in their cells to maturer vigour and perfection, they pierced the cloud themfelves had fpun, and within which they had fo long been enveloped.

And let not the good proteftant be too much ftartled if I here venture to infinuate, that the monafteries were fchools of fome high and refpectable virtues. Poverty, chaflity, and a renunciation of the world, were certainly intended in the firft plan of there inftitutions; and though, from the unavoidable frailty of human nature, they were not always obferved, certain it is, that many individuals amongft them have been ftriking examples of the felf-denying virtues: and as the influence they acquired was only built upon the voluntary homage of the mind, it may be prefumed fuch an afcendancy was not originally gained without fome fpecies of merit. The fondnefs for monkery is eafily deduced from fome of the beft principles in the human heart. It was indeed neceffity, that in the third century firft drove the chriftians to fhelter themfelves from the Decian perfecution in the folitary defarts of Thebais, but the humour foon fpread, and numbers under the name of hermits, or ere-* mites, fecluded themfelves from the commerce of mankind, choofing the wildeft folitudes, living in caves and hollows of the rocks, and fubfifting on fuch roors and herbs as the ground afforded them. About the fourth century they were gathered into communities, and increafed with furprifing rapidity. It was then that, by a great and fudden revolution, the fury of perfecution had ceafed, and the governing powers were become friendly to chriftianity. But the agitation of men's minds did not immediately fubfide with the ftorm. The chriftians had fo long experienced the neceflity of refigning all the enjoyments of life, and were fo detached from every tie which might interfere with the profeffion of their faith, that upon a more favourable turn of affairs they hardly dared open their minds to pleafurable emotions. They thought the life of a good man muft be a continual warfare between mind and body; and having been long ufed to fee eafe and fafety on the one fide, and virtue on the other, no wonder if the affociation was fo ftrong in their ininds, as to fuggeft the neceffity of voluntary mortification, and lead them to inflict thofe fufferings upon themfelves, which they na longer apprehended from others. They had continually experienced the amazing effects of chriftianity in fupporting its followers under hardhip; tortures, and death; and they thought little of its influence in regulating the com-. mon behaviour of life, if it produced none of thofe great exertions they had been ufed to contemplate. They were ftruck with the change from heathen licentioufnefs to the purity of the gofpel; and thought they could never be far enough removed from that bondage of the fenfes which it had juft coft them fo violent a ftruggle to efcape. The minds of men were working with newly-received opinions, not yet mellowed

108 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

1IO ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.

mellowed into a rational faith; and the young converts, aftonifhed at the grandeur and fublimity of the doctrines which then firft entered their hearts with irrefiftable force, thought them worthy to engrofs their whole attention. - The myftic dreams of the Platonift mingled with the enthufiafm of the martyr; and it foon became the prevailing opinion, that filence, folitude, and contemplation, were neceffary for the reception of divine truth. Miftaken ideas prevailed of a purity and perfection far fuperior to the rules of common life, which was only to be attained by thofe who denied themfelves all the indulgences of fenfe; and thus the afcetic feverities of the cloifter fucceeded in fome degree to the philofophic poverty of the Cynic fchool, and the lofty virtues of the Stoic porch.

Indeed, it is now the prevailing tafte in morals to decry every obfervance which has the leaft appearance of rigour; and to infift only on the fofter virtues. But let it be remembered, that felf-command and felf-denial are as neceffary to the practice of benevolence, charity, and compaffion, as to any other duty; that it. is impoffible to live to others without denying ourfelves; and that the man who has not learned to curb his appetites and paffions is ill qualified for thofe facrifices which the friendly affections are continually requiring of him. The man who has that one quality of felf-command will find little difficulty in the practice of any other duty; as, on the contrary, he who has it not, tho' poffeffed of the gentleft feelings, and moft refined fenfibilities, will foon find his benevolence fink into a mere companionable eafinefs of temper, neither ufeful to others nor happy for himfelf. A noble enthufiafm is fometimes of ufe

II2 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS。

to fhow how far human nature can go، Though it may not be proper, or defirable, that numbers fhould feclude themfelves from the common duties and ordinary avocations of life, for the aufterer leffons of the cloifter; yet it is not unufeful that fome fhould pufh their virtues to even a romantic height; and it is encouraging to reflect in the hour of temptation, that the love of eafe, the averfion to pain, every appetite and paffion, and even the ftrongeft propenfities in our nature, have been controuled; that the empire of the mind over the body has been afferted in its fulleft extent; and that there have been men in all ages capable of voluntarily renouncing all the world offers, voluntarily fuffering all it dreads, and living independent, and unconnected with it. Nor was it a fmall advantage, or ill calculated to fupport the dignity of fcience, that a learned man might be refpectable in a coarfe gown, a leaa leathern girdle, and bare-footed. Cardinal Ximenes preferved the fevere fimplicity of a convent amidft the pomp and luxury of palaces; and to thofe who thus-thought it becoming in the higheft ftations to affect the appearance of poverty, the reality furely could not be very dreadful.

There is yet anothef light in which thefe inftitutions may be confidered. It is furely not improper to provide a retreat for thofe who; fained by fome deep. and enormous crime, wifh to expiate by fevere and uncommon penitence thofe offences which render them unworthy of. freer commerce with the world. Repentance is never fo fecure from a relaple as when it breaks off at once from every former connection, and entering upon a new courfe of life, bids adieu to every object that might revive the idea of temp-

TI4 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS.
tations which have once prevailed. In thefe folemn retreats, the fillnefs and acknowledged fanctity of the place, with the ftriking novelty of every thing around them, might have great influence in calming the paffions; might break the force of habit, and fuddenly induce a new turn of thinking. There are likewife afflictions fo overwhelming to humanity, that they leave no relifh in the mind for any thing elfe than to enjoy its own melancholy in filence and folitude; and: to a. heart torn with remorfe, or oppreft with forrow, the gloomy feverities of La Trappe are really a relief. Retirement is alfo the favourite wih of age. Many a ftatefman, and many a warrior, fick of the buftle of that world to which they: had devoted the prime of their days, have longed for fome quiet cell, where, like cardinal Wolfey, or Charles the Fifth, they: might throud their grey hairs, and lofefight of the follies with which they had been too much tainted.

Thougn there is, perhaps; lefs to plead for immuring beauty in a cloifter, and confining that part of the fpecies who are formed to fhine in families and fweeten fociety, to the barren duties and auftere difcipline of a monaftic life; yet circumftances might occur, in which they would, even to a woman, be a welcome refuge. A young female, whom accident or war had deprived of her natural protectors, muft, in an age of barbarifm, be peculiarly expofed and helplefs: A convent offered her an afylum where fhe might be fafe, at leaft, if not happy ; and add to the confcioufnefs of unviolated virtue the flattering dreams of angelic purity and perfection. There were orders, as well amongtt the women as thè men, inftituted for charitable pur-

$$
\text { I } 2 \text { pofes, }
$$

II6 ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS,
pofes, fuch as that of the Virgins of loves or Daugbters of mercy, founded in 1660, for the relief of the fick poor; with others for inftructing their children. Thefe muft have been peculiarly fuited to the foftneis and compaffion of the fex, and to this it is no doubt owing, that ftill, in catholic countries, ladies of the higheft rank often vifit the hofpitals and houfes of the poor ; waiting on them with the moft tender affiduity, and performing fuch offices as our proteftant ladies would be fhocked at the thoughts of. We fhould alfo confider, that moft of the females who now take the veil, are fuch as have no agreeable profpects in life. Why fhould not thefe be allowed to quit a world which will never mifs them? It is eafier to retire from the public, than to fupport its difregard. The convent is to them a fhelter from poverty and neglect. Their little community grows dear to them.
them. The equality which fubfifts among thefe fifters of obfcurity, the fimilarity of their fate, the peace, the leifure they enjoy, give rife to the moft endearing friendihips. Their innocence is fhielded by the fimplicity of their life from even the idea of ill; and they are flattered by the notion of a voluntary renunciation of pleafures, which, probably, had they continued in the world; they would have had little fhare in,

- After all that can be faid, we have reafon enough to rejoice that the fuperftitions of former times are now fallen into difrepute. What might be a palliative at one time, foon became a crying evil in itfelf. When the fuller day of fcience began to dawn, the monkifh orders were willing to exclude its brightnefs, that the dim lamp might ftill glimmer in their cell. Their growing vices I 3 have

II ON MONASTIC INSTITUTIONS,
have rendered them juftly odious to fociety, and they feem in a fair way of being for ever abolifhed. But may we not ftill hope that the world was better than it would have been without them; and that he, who knows to bring good out of evil, has made them, in their day, fubfervient to fome ufeful purpofes. The corruptions of chriftianity, which have been accumulating for fo many ages, feem to be now gradually clearing away, and fome future period may perhaps exhibit our religion in all its native fimplicity.

So the pure limpid ftream, when foul with ftains. Of rufhing torrents, and defcending rains; Works itfelf clear, and as it runs refines, Till by degrees the floating mirror fhines;
Reflects each flower that on its borders grows, And a new heaven in its fair bofom fhews.

$$
\begin{gathered} (\text { IIg) } \\
\text { ONTME } \\
\text { PLEAS URE } \\ \text { DERIVED PROM } \\ \text { OBJECTS OF TERROR; } \\ \text { WITH } \\ \text { SIR BERTMRAND, } \end{gathered}
$$

A FRAGMENT.

THAT the exercife of our benevolent feelings, as called forth by the view of human afflictions, fhould be a fource of pleafure, cannot appear wonderful to one who confiders that relation between the moral and natural fyftem of man, I 4 which which has connected a degree of fatis= faction with every action or emotion productive of the general welfare. The painful fenfation immediately arifing from a fcene of mifery, is fo much foftened and alleviated by the reflex fenfe of felf-approbation attending virtuous fympathy, that we find, on the whole, a very exquifite and refined pleafure remaining, which makes us defirous of again being witneffes to fuch fcenes, inftead of flying from them with difgutt and horror. It is obvious how greatly fuch a provifion muft conduce to the ends of mutual fupport and affiftance. But the apparent delight with which we dwill upon objects of pure terror; where our moral feelings are not in the leaft concerned, and no paffion feems to be excited but the depreffing one of fear, is a paradax of the heart, much more difficult of folution.

The reality of this fource of pleafure feems evident from daily obfervation, The greedinefs with which the tales of ghofts and goblins, of murders, earthquakes, fires, fhipwrecks, and all the moft terrible difafters attending human life, are devoured by every ear, muft have been generally remarked. Tragedy, the moft favourite work of fiction, has taken a full fhare of thofe fcenes; "it has fupt full with horrors," and has, perhaps, been more indebted to them for public admiration than to its tender and pathetic part. The ghoft of Hamlet, Macbeth defcending into the witches' cave, and the tent fcene in Richard, command as forcibly the attention of our fouls as the parting of Jaffier and Belvidera, the fall of Wolfey, or the death. of Shore. The infpiration of terror was by the ancient critics affigned as the peculiar province of tragedy; and the Greek

Greek and Roman tragedians have introduced fome extraordinary perfonages for this purpofe: not only the fhades of the dead, but the furies, and other fabulous inhabitants of the infernal regions. Collins, in his moft poetical ode to Fear, has finely enforced this idea.

Tho' gentle Pity claim her mingled part, Yet all the thunders of the fcéne are thine.

The old Gothic romance and the Eaftern tale, with their genii, giants, enchantments, and transformations, however a refined critic may cenfure them as abfurd and extravagant, will ever retain a moft powerful influence on the mind, and intereft the reader, independently of all peculiarity of tafte. Thus the great Milton, who had a ftrong bias to thefe wildneffes of the imagination, has, with ftriking effect, made the ftories "of forefts and enchantments drear," a favourite
favourite fubject with his Penferofo; and had undoubtedly their awakening images ftrong upon his mind when he break's out,

Call up him that left half-told The ftory of Cambufcan bold ; &c.

How are we then to account for the pleafure derived from fuch objects? I have often been led to imagine that there is a deception in thefe cafes; and that the avidity with which we attend is not a proof of our receiving real pleafure. The pain of fufpenfe, and the irrefiftible defire of fatisfying curiofity, when once raifed, will account for our eagernefs to go quite through an adventure, though we fuffer actual pain during the whole courfe of it. We rather choofe to fuffer the fmart pang of a violent emotion than the uneafy craving of an unfatisfied defire. That this principle, in many inftances, may involuntarily carry us through what we dinike, I am convinced from experience. This is the impulfe which renders the pooreft and moft infipid narrative interefting when once we get fairly into it; and I have frequently felt it with regard to our modern novels, which, if lying on my table, and taken up in an idle hour; have led me through the moft tedious and difgutting pages, while, like Piftol eating his leek, I have fwallowed and execrated to the end. And it will not only force us through dulnefs, but through actual torture-through the relation of a Damien's execution, or an inquifitor's act of faith. When children, therefore, liften with pale and mute attention to the frightful ftories of apparitions, we are not, perhaps, to imagine that they are in a flate of enjoyment, any more than the poor bird which is dropping into the mouth of the rattlefnake; they are chained by the ears, and fafcinated by curiofity.

124 ON OBJECTS OF TERROR.

$$
\text { ON OBJECTS OT TERROR: i } 25
$$

curiofity. This folution, however, does not fatisfy me with refpect to the wellwrought fcenes of artificial terror which are formed by a fublime and vigorous imagination. Here; though we know before-hand what to expect, we enter into them with eagernefs, in queft of a pleafure already experienced. This is the pleafure conftantly attached to the excitement of furprife from new and wonderful objects. A ftrange and unexpected event awakens the mind, and keeps it on the ftretch; and where theagency of invifible beings is introduced, of " forms unfeen, and mightier far than we," our imagination, darting forth, explores with rapture the new world which is laid open to its view, and rejoices in the expanfion of its powers.- Paffion and fancy co-operating, elevate the foul to its higheft pitch; and the pain of terror is loft in amazement.

Hence,

126 ON OBJECTS OF TERROR.
Hence, the more wild, fanciful, and extraordinary are the circumftances of a fcene of horror, the more pleafure we receive from it; and where they are too near common nature, though violently borne by curiofity through the adventure, we cannot repeat it, or reflect on it, without an over-balance of pain. In the Arabian Nigbts are many moft ftriking examples of the terrible, joined with the marvellous : the ftory of Aladdin, and the travels of Sinbad, are particularly excellent. The Cafle of Otranto is a very fpirited modern attempt upon the fame plan of mixed terror, adapted to the model of Gothic romance. The beft conceived, and the moft ftrongly workedup fcene of mere natural horror that I recollect, is in Smolett's Ferdinand Count Fatbom; where the hero, entertained in a lone houfe in a foreft, finds a corpfe juft flaughtered in the room where he is fent

> ON OBJECTS OF TERROR. T2Y
so Aeep, and the door of which is lockect upon him. It may be amufing for the reader to compare his feelings upon théfe, and from thence form his opinion of the juftnefs of my theory. The following fragment, in which both thefe manners: are attempted to be in fome degree. united, is offered to entertain a folitary winter's evening.
........ AFter this adventure, Sir Bertrand turned his fteed towards the wolds, hoping to crofs thefe dreary moors before the curfew. But ere he had proceeded half his journey, he was bewildered by the different tracks, and not being able, as far as the eye could reach; to efpy any object but the brown heath furrounding him, he was at length quite uncertain which
í28 sík béritraind, which way he fhould direct his courfe: Night overtook hìm in this fituation: It ${ }^{2}$ was one of thofe nights when the moon gives a faint glimmering of light through the thick black clouds of a lowering fky. Now and then fhe fuddenly emerged in full fplendor from her veil; and then in* ftantly retired behind it, having juft ferved. to give the forlorn Sir Bertrand a wide extended profpect over the defolate wafte. Hope and native courage a while urged him to puifh forwards, but at length the increafing darknefs and fatigue of body and mind overcame him; he dreaded. moving from the ground he ftood on; for fear of unknown pits and bogs; and alighting from his horfe in defpair, he threw himfelf on the ground. He had not long continued in that pofture when the fullen toll of a diftant bell ftruck his ears-he ftarted up, and, turning towards the found, difcerned a dim twinkling light. Intantly

Inftantly he feized his horfe's bridle, and with cautious fteps advanced towards it. After a painful march, he was ftopt by a moated ditch furrounding the place from whence the light proceeded; and by a momentary glimpfe of moon-light he had a full view of a large antique manfion, with turrets at the corners, and an ample porch in the center. The injuries of time were ftrongly marked on every thing about it. The roof in various places was fallen in, the battlements were half demolifhed, and the windows broken and difmantled. A draw-bridge, with a ruinous gate-way at each end, led to the court before the building. He entered, and inftantly the light, which proceeded from a window in one of the turrets, glided. along and vanifhed; at the fame moment the moon funk beneath a black cloud, and the night was darker than ever. All was filent. Sir Bertrand faftened his fteed under a fhed, and approaching the houfe, traverfed its whole front with light and flow footiteps. All was fill as death. He looked in at the lower windows, but could not diftinguifh a fingle object through the impenetrable gloom. After a fhort parley with himfelf, he entered the porch, and feizing a maffy iron knocker at the gate, lifted it up, and hefitating, at length ftruck a loud Atroke. The noife refounded through the whole manfion with hollow echoes. All was ftill again. . He repeated the ftrokes more boldly, and louder-another interval of filence enfued. A third time he knocked, and a third time all was ftill. He then fell back to fome diftance, that he might difcern whether any light could be feen in the whole front. It again appeared in the fame place, and quickly glided away as before. At the fame inftant, a deep fullen toll founded from the turret. Sir Bertrand's heart made a fearful ftop-He was a while motionlefs; then terror impelled him to make fome hafty fteps towards his fteed; but fhame ftopt his flight ; and, urged by honour, and a refiftlefs defire of finifhing the adventure, he returned to the porch; and, working up his foul to a full fteadinefs of refolution, he drew forth his fword with one hand, and with the other lifted up the latch of the gate. The heavy door, creeking upon its hinges, reluctantly yielded to his hand - he applied his fhoulder to it, and forced it open - he quitted it, and ftept forward the door inftantly fhut with a thundering clap. Sir Bertrand's blood was chilled - he turned back to find the door, and it was long ere his trembling hands could feize it-but his utmoft ftrength could not open it agin. After $; \mathrm{K}_{2}$ feveral feveral ineffectual attempts, he looked behind him, and beheld, acrofs a hall, upon a large ftaircafe, a pale bluifh flame, which caft a difmal gleam of light around. He again fummoned forth his courage, and advanced towards it-It retired. He came to the foot of the ftairs, and, after a moment's deliberation, afcended. He went flowly up, the flame retiring before him, till he came to a wide gallery-The flame proceeded along it, and he followed in filent horror, treading lightly, for the echoes of his footteps ftartled him. It led him to the foot of another ftaircafe, and then vanimed. At the fame inftant, another toll founded from the turret-Sir Bertrand felt it frike upon his heart. He was now in total darknefs, and, with his arms extended, began to afcend the fecond ftaircafe. A dead. cold hand met his left hand, and firmly grafped grafped it, drawing him forcibly forwards - he endeavoured to difengage himfelf, but could not-he made a furious blow with his fword, and inftantly a loud fhriek pierced his ears, and the dead hand was left powerlefs in hisHe dropt it, and rufhed forwards with a defperate valour. The ftairs were narrow and winding, and interrupted by frequent breaches, and loofe fragments of ftone. The ftaircafe grew narrower and narrower, and at length terminated in a low iron grate. Sir Bertrand pufhed it openit led to an intricate winding paffage, juft large enough to admit a perfon upon his hands and knees. A faint glimmering of light ferved to fhew the nature of the place. Sir Bertrand entered-A deep hollow groan refounded from a diftance through the vault-He went forwards, and proceeding beyond the firft turning, ke difcerned the fame blue flame which had before conducted him. He followed it. The vault, at length, fuddenly opened into a lofty gallery, in the midft of which a figure appeared, completely armed, thrufting forwards the bloody ftump of an arm, with a terrible frown and menacing gefture, and brandifhing a fword in his hand. Sir Bertrand $\cdot$ undauntedly fprung forwards; and, aiming a fierce blow at the figure, it inftantly vanifhed, letting fall a mafly iron key. The flame now refted upon a pair of ample folding doors at the end of the gallery. Sir Bertrand went up to it, and applied the key to a brazen lock.' With difficulty he turned the bolt. Inftantly the doors flew open, and difcovered a large apartment, at the end of which was a coffin refted upon a bier, with a taper burning on each fide of it. Along the room, on both fides, were gigantic ftatues of black marble, attired attired in the Moorifh habit, and holding enormous fabres in their right hands. Each of them reared his arm, and advanced one leg forwards as the knight entered; at the fame moment, the lid of the coffin flew open, and the bell tolled. The flame ftill glided forwards, and Sir Bertrand refolutely, followed, till he arrived within fix paces of the coffin. Suddenly, a lady in a fhroud and black veil rofe up in it, and ftretched out her arms towards him; at the fame time, the ftatues clafhed their fabres, and advanced. Sir Bertrand flew to the lady, and clafped her in his armsfhe threw up her veil, and kiffed his lips; and inftantly the whole building fhook as with an earthquake, and fell afunder with a horrible crafh. Sir Bertrand was thrown into a fudden trance, and, on recovering, found himfelf feated on a velvet fofa, in the molt magnificent room he had ever feen, lighted with innumerable tapers, in luftres of pure eryftal. A fumptuous banquet was fet in the middle. The doors opening to Toft mufic, a lady of incomparable beauty, attired with amazing fplendor, entered, furrounded by a troop of gay nymphs, more fair than the Graces. She advanced to the knight, and, falling on her knees, thanked him as her deliverer. The nymphs placed a garland of laurel upon his head, and the lady led him by the hand to the banquet, and fat befide him. The nymphs placed themfelves at the table, and a numerous train of fervants entering, ferved up the feaft; delicious mufic playing all the time. Sir Bertrand could not fpeak for aftonifhment: he could only return their honours by courteous looks and geftures.

$$
\mathrm{K}_{3} \quad \text { had }
$$

A FRAGMENT.
137 geftures. After the banquet was finifhed, all retired but the lady, who, leading back the knight to the fofa, addreffed him in thefe words :

```
HEROICCPOEMM
```

-

G O N D I B E R T.

A Person engaged in the purfuit of literary fame mutt be feverely mortified on obferving the very fpeedy neglect into which writers of high merit fo frequently fall. The revolution of centuries, the extinction of languages, the vaft convulfions which agitate a whole people, people, are caufes which may well be fubmitted to in overwhelming an author with oblivion; but that in the fame country, with little variation of language or manners; the delights of one age fhould become utter ftrangers in the next, is furely an immaturity of fate which conveys reproach upon the inconftancy of national tafte. That noble band, the Englih poets, have ample reafon for complaining to what unjuft guardians they have entrufted their renown. While we crown the ftatue of Shakefpeare as the prince of dramatic poets, fhall we forget the works, and almoft the names of his contemporaries who poffeffed fo much of a kindred fpirit ? Shall the Italian Paftor Fido and Amyntas ftand high in our eftimation, and the Faithful Sbepberdefs, the moft beautiful paftoral that a poet's fancy ever formed, be fcarcely known amongft us?

140 ON THE HEROIC POEM
Shall we feel the fire of heroic poetry in tran@lations from Greece and Rome, and never fearch for it in the native productions of our own country?

The capital work of Sir William D'Avenant, which I now defire to call forth from its obfcurity, may well be confidered as in a ftate of oblivion, fince we no where meet with allufions to it, or quotations from it, in our modern writers; and few, I imagine, even of the profeffed ftudents in Englifh claffics, would think their tafte difcredited by confeffing that they had never read Gondibert. A very learned and ingenious critic, in his wellknown difcourfe upon poetical imitation, has, indeed, taken notice of this poem; but, though he beftows all due praife upon its author, yet the purpofe for which it is mentioned being to inftance an effential error, we cannot fuppofe that his authority has ferved to gain it more readers. Having very judicioufly laid it down as a general obfervation, that writers, by ftudioufly avoiding the fancied difgrace of imitation, are apt to fall into improper method, forced conceits, and affected expreffion; he proceeds to introduce the work in queftion after the following manner: "And, that "s the reader may not fufpect me of " afferting this without experience, let " me exemplify what has been here faid " in the cafe of a very eminent perfon, is who, with all the advantages of art " and nature that could be required " to adorn the true poet, was ruined " by this fingle error. The perfon I " mean was Sir William D'avenant, " whofe Gondibert will remain a per" petual monument of the mifchiefs " which muft ever arife from this af" fectation of originality in lettered and "polite poets."

A considerable degree of deference is undoubtedly due to a critic of fuch acknowledged tafte and abilities ; yet, fince it appears to me, that in this inftance he writes under the influence of fyftem and learned prejudice, I fhall venture to canvafs the principles upon which he fupports his cenfure.

The method of Gondibert is firft objected tó by Dr. Hurd, and upon two accounts. Firf, that the compals of the poem is contracted from the limits of the ancient epic, to thofe of the dramatic form; and by this means, purfuing a clofe accelerated plot, the opportunity is loft of introducing digreffive ornaments, and of giving that minutenefs of defcription which confers an air of reality. Now, fince the author fets out with difavowing the common rules of epic poetry, it is certainly unjuft to try him by thofe rules.

That effects are not produced which he never defigned to produce, can be no matter of blame'; we have only to examine the juftnefs of the defign itfelf. It is wrong to expect incompatible qualities as well in compofitions as in men. A work cannot at the fame time poffefs force and diffurivenefs, rapidity and minutenefs.

Every one who has read Homer without prejudice, will, I doubt not, confefs that the effects which fhould refult from the great events of the fory are much broken and impeded by that very minutenefs of defcription, and frequency of digreffion which D'avenant is blamed for rejecting. The mind, warmed by an interefting narration, either in hiftory, poetry, or romance, requires the writer to keep up with its exertions, and cannot bear him to flag in his pace, or turn afide in purfuit of other objects. The proper end

144 ON THE HEROIC POEM
end of epic poetry, according to Dr. Hurd, is admiration. This, I imagine, would by no means have been allowed by our author, who feems rather to have placed it in interefting the paffions, inculcating noble fentiments, and informing the underftanding: nor does it anfwer the idea of Horace, who praifes Homer for his moral leffons, for teaching
...--Quid fit pulcrum, quid turpe, quid utile, quid non.
However, a due limitation of fubject, and fomething of rapidity in purfuing it, appear very neceffary to the production of a confiderable effect, of what kind foever; and a pompous difplay of foreign circumftances mult always debilitate more than adorn. It appears an extremely bad compliment to an epic poem, to fay that its chief beauty lies in the epirodes. Indeed, epic poetry, as exifting in the models of antiquity, antiquity, or their copies, by no means, I think, deferves the title given by critics, of the higheft fpecies of poetical compofition. The tedious compafs of the fubject, the neceffity of employing fo large a hare of the work in the relation of trifing occurrences for the fake of connexion, and the frequency of interruptions from collateral matter, ineyitably caufe both the poet's exertions and the reader's attention to intermit; and it is no wonder that Homer; and Virgil too, fometimes nod over their labours. The author of Gondibert feems to have been fenfible of thefe inconveniences, and upon fair comparifon of the epic and dramatic form, to have preferred the latter, as capable of more fpirit, and uniform dignity. We fhall find, however, in reviewing the poem, that he has by no means reftricted himfelf fo narrowly as to preclude all ornamental deviations; and though they may not deferve the title of epifodes, yet in his fhort and unfinifhed piece, they have all the defirable effect of a pleafing variety.

146 ON THE HEROIC POEM

The fecond objection which Dr.Hurd brings againft the metbod of this poem, is the rejection of all fupernatural agency, or what conftitutes the machinery of the ancient epic poem. But for this the critic himfelf offers a vindication, when he commends the author for not running into the wild fables of the Italian romances, "c which had too flender a foundation in " the ferious belief of his age to juttify a " relation to them." Now, by making this belief an effential rule of propriety with refpect to the machinery, an author in an enlightened period, fuch as that of D'avenant, is, in effect, prohibited from its ufe altogether; for the abftracted nature of a pure and philofophical religion renders it utterly unfit for the purpofes of poetical fiction. The works of fuch Chriftian poets as have attempted to form a fyftem of machinery upon the ideas of faints, angels, and tutelary fpirits, will fufficiently prove that their religion, even with a mixture of popular fuperftition, was ill calculated to affift their imagination. Two writers, whom one would little expect to meet upon the fame ground, Sir Richard Blackmore and Monf. Voltaire, have given inftances of the fame faulty plan in this refpect; and nothing in the good Knight's epic labours can more deferve the attack of ridicule, than the divine miffion in the Henriade for inftructing his Majefty in the fublime myfteries of tranfubftantiation.

It was a very jult charge which Plato brought againft Homer, that he had greatly contributed to debafe religion by

L 2
the

148 ON THE HEROIC POEM

the unworthy and abfurd reprefentations he has given of the celeftial beings, both with refpect to their power and their jutice; and this is a fault which the poet muft always in fome meafure be guilty of, when he too familiarly mixes divine agency with human events. Nor does it appear more favourable to the greatnefs of the human perfonages that they are on all occafions fo beholden to the immediate interpofition of divine allies. The refined and judicious Virgil, though he has tolerably kept up the dignity of his Deities, has yet very much lowered his heroes from this caufe. When we fee Æneas, the fon of a Goddefs, aided by a God, and covered with celeftial armour, with difficulty vanquifhing the gallant Turnus, we conclude, that without fuch odds, the victory muft have fallen on the other fide. Under fuch a fyftem of fupernatural agency, there was no other sway of exalting a man than making him, like Diomed, war againft the Gods, or, like Cato, approve a caufe which they hàd unjuftly condemned. Surely, a 's fober intermixture of religion" can never be, attributed to the ancient epic. The poem of Gondibert is, indeed, without all this mixture of religious machinery, whether it be termed fober or extravagant. Human means, are brought to accomplifh human ends; and Cowley, in his recommendatory lines prefixed to the work, has thus expreffed his approbation of this part of the plan.

Methinks heroic poefie till now
Like fome fantaftique fairy-land did fhow;
Gods, Devils, Nymphs, Witches, and Giant's race, And all but Man, in man's beft work had place. Thou, like fome worthy Knight, with facred arms
Doft drive the Monfters thence, and end the charms: Inftead of thefe doft Men and Manners plant, The things which that rich foil did chiefly want.

$$
\text { L } 3 \quad W_{E}
$$

I 50 ON THE HEROIC POEM
$W \mathrm{e}$ fhall fee hereafter, that the author has not neglected to introduce religious Sentiment, and that of a more noble and elevated kind than can eafily be paralleled in poetry.

But as the poet, in the critic's opinion, did too much in banifhing every thing fupernatural in the events, fo he did too little in retaining the fantaftic notions of love and honour in the characters of his piece, which were derived from the fame fource of fiction and romance. There is, however, an effential difference between the cafes. Artificial fentiments, however unnatural at firt, may, from the operation of particular caufes, become fo familiar as to be adopted into the manners of the age. Inftances of fafhion in fentiment are almoft as frequent as of fafhion in drefs. It is certain that the romantic ideas of love and honour did in fact prevail in a high degree during a confiderable period of the later ages, owing to caufes which the fame ingenious critic has in a very curious manner inveftigated, in his letters on Cbivalry and Romance. They gave the leading tone to all polifhed manners; and gallantry was as ferious a principle in the Italian courts, as love to their country in the ftates of Greece or old Rome. Supernatural agency in human events, on the other hand, however commonly pretended, or firmly believed, would never approach one ftep nearer to reality. After all, the author of Gondibert could not intend to reduce his poem to mere hiftory; but he chofe to take a poetical licence in the dignity and elevation of his fentiments, rather than in the marvelloufnefs of its events. He thought he might attribute to the exalted perfonages of courts and camps the fame noblenefs of mind which himfelf, a courtier and a foldier, poffefled, If his work be allowed lefs grand and entertaining from the want of fuch ornaments as thofe of his predeceffors are decorated wish, it will yet be difficult to fhew how, at his time, they could have beeí applied confiftently with good fenfe and improved tafte.

$$
\mathrm{L}_{4} \quad \text { himfelf, }
$$

So much in vindication of the general metbod of Sir W. D'avenant's poem: With refpect to its execution, the juffice of Dr. Hurd's cenfure cannot be controverted. That tis fentiments are frequently far-fetched and affected, and his expreffion quaint and oblcure, is but too obvioufly apparent; and thefe faults, together with the want of harmony in verfification, will fufficiently account for the neglect into which the work is fallen, though interefling in its ftory, and thick fown with beauties. Readers who take up a book merely for the indolent amufement of a leifure hour, cannot endure the labour of unharbouring a fine thought from the cover of perplexed expreffion, The pleafure arifing from a flowing line, or a rounded period, is more engaging to them, becaufe more eafily enjoyed, than that from a fublime or witty conception. The author's faulty execution, however, arofe from a fource directly contrary to the "dread of imitation," Imitation itfelf led him to it; for almoft all the models of polite literature exifting in his own country, and indeed in the other polifhed nations of Europe, were characterized by the very fame vitiation of tafte. Among our own writers, it. is fufficient to inftance Donne, Suckling and Cowley, for this conftant affectation of wit and uncommon fentiment, and for a confequent obfcurity of expreffion. Yet all thefe, and Sir W. D'avenant, perhaps,

154 ON THE HLROIC POEM
in a more eminent degree than the reft, had for great occafions, above the temptation of trifling, a majeftic and nervous fimplicity, both of fentiment and expreffion:; which, with our more refined tafte and language, we have never been able to equal.

I should now hope that the reader would fet out with me upon a nearer infpection of this poem, with the general idea of its being the work of an elevated genius, pregnant with a rich flore of free and noble fentiment, fafhioned by an intimate commerce with the great world, and boldly purfuing an original, but not an unkilful plan.

The meafure chofen for this poem is that which we now almoft confine to elegy. This choice does not appear very judicious; for, although our elegiac ftanza poffeffes poffeffes a ftrength and fulnefs which renders it not unfuitable to heroic fubjects, yet, in a piece of confiderable length, every returning meafure muft become tirefome from its frequent repetitions. And this is not the wortt effect of returning ftanzas, in a long work. The neceffity of comprizing a fentence within the limits of the meafure is the tyranny of Procruftes to thought. For the fake of a difagreeable uniformity, expreffion muft conitantly be cramped or extended. In general, the latter expedient will be practifed, as the eafielt; and thus both fentiment and language will be enfeebled by unmeaning expletives. This, indeed, in fome meafure, is the effect of rhyme couplets; and fill more of the Latin hexameter and pentameter. In our author, a redundancy of thought, running out into parenthefes, feems to have been produced, or at leaft encouraged by the meafure.
if6 On the heroic poem
meafure. But I think he has generally preferved a force and majefty of expreffion.

Ir would have been highly injudicious for one who has rejected all poetical machinery, to have begun his poem with the ancient form of invoking a Mufe. Indeed, in all modern writers this invocation appears little better than an unmeaning ceremony, practifed by rote from ancient cuttom; and very properly makes a part of the receipt for an epic poem humouroufly laid down after the exact model of mechanical imitation, in the Spectator, Our author, with fimple and unaffected dignity, thus opens at once into his fubject:

Of all the Lombards, by their trophies known, Who fought fame foon, and had her favour long; King Aribert bell feem'd to fill the throne, And bred moft bufinefs for heroick fong.

This conquering monarch, we are foon acquainted, was bleit with an only child, the heroine of the ftory,

Recorded Rhodalind! whofe high renown
Who mifs in books not luckily have read; Or vex'd with living beauties of their own

Have fhunn'd the wife records of lovers deaf.
Descriptions of female beauty have engaged the powers of poets in every age, who have exhaufted all nature for imagery to heighten their painting; yet the picture has ever been extremely faint and inadequate. Our poet judiciounly confines his defcription of Rhodalind to the qualities of her mind, contenting himfelf with general praifes, though in the high-flown gallantry of the times, of her perfonal charms.

Her looks like empire fhew'd, great above pride ;
Since pride ill counterfeits exceflive height :
But Nature publifh'd what fhe fain would hide,
Who for her deeds, not beauty, lov'd the light.

158 ON THE HEROIC POEM

To make her lowly mind's appearance lefs,
She us'd fome outward greatnefs for difguife ;
Efteem'd as pride the cloyftral lowlinefs,
And thought them proud who even the proud defpife.

Opprefors big with pride, when fhe appear'd, Blufh'd, and believ'd their greatnefs counterfeit;
The lowly thought they them in vain had fear'd;
Found virtue harmlefs, and nought elfe fo great.

Her mind (fcarce to her feeble fex a-kin)
Did as her birth, her right to empire fhow ; Seem'd carelefs outward, when employ'd within ;

Her fpeech, like lovers watch'd, was kind and low.
The court of Aribert could not want men of high rank and accomplifhments to pay their devotions at fuch a fhrine. Among thefe, "Oswald the great, and greater Gondibert" moved in the moft exalted fphere of renown. Thefe noble perfonages perfonages are characterized and contrafted with fo mafterly a hand, that it would be an injury not to tranfcribe the whole.

In courts, prince Ofwald coftly was and gay, Finer than near vain kings their fav'rites are!
Outhin'd bright fav'rites on their nuptial day;
Yet were his eyes dark with ambitious care.

Duke Gondibert was fill more gravely clad,
But yet his looks familiar were, and clear ;
As if with ill to others never fad,
Nor tow'rds himfelf could others practife fear.

The Prince could, porpoife-like, in tempefts play, And in court florms on fhip-wreck'd greatnefs feed;
Not frighted with their fate when caft away,
But to their glorious hazards durft fucceed.

The Duke would lafting calms to courts affure,
As pleafant gardens we defend from winds;
For he who bus'nefs would from forms procure,
Soon his affairs above his manage finds.

Ofwald in throngs the abject people fought
With humble looks; who fill too late will know
They are ambition's quarry, and foon caught
When the afpiring eagle ftoops fo low.

The Duke did thefe by fteady virtue gain;
Which they in action more than precept tafte;
Deeds fhew the good, and thofe who goodnefs feig* By fuch ev'n through their vizards are outfac't.

Ofwald in war was worthily renown'd ;
Though gay in courts, coarfely in camps could live
Judg'd danger foon, and firft was in it found;
Could toil, to gain what he with eafe did give.

Yet toils and dangers through ambition lov'd,
Which does in war the name of virtue own:
But quits that name when from the war remov'd, As rivers theirs when from their channels gone.

The Duke (as reftlefs as his fame in war)
With martial toil could Ofwald weary make,
And calmly do what he with rage did dare, And give fo much as he might deign to take.

Him as their founder cities did adore ;
The court he knew to fteer in ftorms of ftare;
In fields, a battle loft he could reflore, And after force the victors to their fate.

Of thefe great rivals, Gondibert was he whom the king had deftined for his fon-in-law, and the heir of his throne; and Rhodalind too, in the privacy of her own breaft, had made the fame choice. This is related in a manner little inferior to Shakefpear's famous defcription of concealed love.

Yet fadly it is fung, that fhe in fhades,
Mildly as mourning doves, love's forrows felt; Whilft in her fecret tears, her frefnnefs fades,

As rofes filently in lymbecks melt.
Gondibert, however, though of a nature by no means unfufceptible of the tender paffion, had not as yet felt it for a particular object; and Ofwald, who ftood forth as the public fuitor to the princefs, M was

162 ON THE HEROIC POEM
was incited by no other motive than ambition. Not Rhodalind herfelf (fays the poet)

Could he affect, but flining in her throne.
His caufe was powerfully pleaded with the princefs by his fifter Gartha, with whom we are next brought acquainted. A bold, full, majeftic beauty; and a correfponding mind, high, reftlefs, and afpiring, are her diftinguifhing features. The prince and duke were urged on to ambitious purfuits by their refpective armies, which, juft returned from conqueft, lay encamped, the one at Brefcia, and the other at Bergamo. That of Gondibert was compofed of hardy youth whom he had felected from his father's camp, and educated in martial difcipline under his own infpection. Temperance, chaftity, vigilance, humanity, and all the high virtues of chivalry, remarkably diftinguifh diftinguifh thefe young foldiers from thofe of later times. Beauty, indeed, commanded no lefs regard amongtt them than in a modern camp; but it was an object of paffion, and not of appetite; and was the powerful engine in their education which infpired them with noble and exalted fentiments. This is an idea on which our author, true to the principles of chivalry, very frequently enlarges, and always with peculiar force and dignity. In the prefent inftance it is thus finely expreffed :

But, though the Duke taught rigid difcipline, He let them beauty thus at diftance know ; As priefts difcover fome more facred fhrine,

Which none muft touch, yet all to it may bow.

When thus, as fuitors, mourning virgins pafs
Thro' their clean camp, themfelves in form they draw, That they with martial reverence may grace Beauty, the ftranger, which they feldom faw.

164 ON THE HEROIC POEM,
They vayl'd their enfigns as it by did move, Whilft inward, as from native confcience, all Worfhip'd the poet's darling godhead, Love ; Which grave philofophers did Nature call.

Indeed, the influence of this paffion in its pureft and moft exalted flate during the courfe of education, is a fubject that might, perhaps, thine as much in the hands of a moralift as of a poet.

The foldiers of Ofwald were his father's brave veterans, in whofe arms he had been bred. The ftory thus opened, and our attention awakened to the expectation of important events, the firft canto is clofed.The fecond canto introduces us to a folemn annual hunting, held by Duke Gondibert in commemoration of a great victory gained on this day by his grandfire. His train was adorned by many gallant and noble perfons, the friends of his family, and commanders in his army.

The huning, which is defcribed with much poetical fpirit, terminates in a combat. As Gondibert and his party are re-turning weary homeward, an ancient ranger haftily brings the tidings that Ofwald, who had lain in ambunh with a body of chofen horfe, is advancing upon them. The Duke, rejecting all counfels of flight, prepares to receive his foes; and with an account of their principal leaders, and the order of their march, the canto concludes.

Aparley between the chiefs now fuceeeds, in which the character of each is well preferved. Ofwald warmly accufes his rival for ufurping his claims on the princefs and the kingdom. Gondibert defends himfelf with temper, and difavows all ambitious defigns. The other difdains accommodation; and the conference ends in a generous agreement to decide their differences in fingle fight.

When every thing is prepared for the combat, Hubert, the brother of Ofwald, fteps forth with a general challenge to the oppofite party. This is inftantly accepted, and ferves for a prelude to fo many others, that a general engagement feems likely to enfue; when Ofwald reproves their difobedient ardour : and, upon Hubert's infifting to fhare his fate from the rights of brotherhood, it is at length decided that three perfons of each party fhould enter the lifts along with their generals. The duel then comes on, in the fourth canto ; in which Ofwald, Hubert, Paradine and Dargonet, are feverally matched with Gondibert; Hurgonil, the lover of Orna, the Duke's fifter ; and Arnold and Hugo, generous rivals in Laura. Defcriptions of battle are fo frequent in epic poetry, that fcarcely any circumftances of variety are left to diverfify them. Homer and his imitators have attempted novelty novelty in the multiplicity of their combats by every poffible variation of weapon, polture, and wound. They confidered the human body with anatomical nicety; and dwelt with a favage pleafure upon evary idea of pain and horror that ftudied butchery could excite. I fhall leave it to the profeffed admirers of antiquity to determine under what head of poetical beauty. fuch objects are to be ranged. The terrible is certainly a principal fource of the fublime; but a naughter-houfe or a furgery would not feem proper ftudies for a poet. D'avenant has drawn little from them. His battles are rendered interefting chiefly by the character and fituation of the combatants. When Arnold, the favoured lover of Laura, is ीlain by Paradine, Hugo, who had overthrown his antagonift, fprings to avenge his rival; with thefe truly gallant expreffions :
$M_{4} \quad$ Vain

Vain conqueror, faid Hugo then, return!
Inftead of laurel, which the victor wears,
Go gather cyprefs for thy brother's urn, *
And learn of me to water it with tears.
Thy brother lof his life attempting mine;
Which cannot for Lord Arrold's lofs fuffice:
I muft revenge, unlucky Paradine !
The blood his death will draw from Laura's eyes.
We rivals were in Laura; but, tho' She
My griefs' derided, his with fighs approv'd, Yet I, in love's exact integrity,

Mutt take thy life for killing him the lov'd.
His generofity, however, was fatal both to his foe and himfelf.

Hubert, difabled by a wound in his arm, is difhonoured by receiving his life from his conqueror; upon which occafion the poet thus beautifully apoftrophifes :

O Honour, frail as life, thy fellow flower !
Cherifn'd, and watch'd, and hum'roully efteen'd, Then worn for fhort adornments of an hour;

And is, when loft, no more than life redeem'd.

The two chiefs are ftill left clofely engaging ; and when Hurgonil approaches to affift his lord, he is warmly commanded to retire. At length, after many mutual wounds, Ofwald falls.

The death of the Prince at the fame time takes off all reftraint from his party, and incites them to revenge. Led by the wounded Hubert, old Vafco, and Borgio, they attack the hunters, who, befides the fatigue of the chace, are reprefented as fomewhat inferior in number. A furious battle, the fubject of the fifth canto, now enfues. Gondibert fhines forth in all the fplendor of a hero. By his prowefs his friends are refcued, and the oppofite leaders overthrown in vari-. ous feparate encounters; and by his military fkill the brave veterans of Ofwald are defeated. The whole defcription of the battle is warm and animated.

170 ON THE HEROIC POEM
In Gondibert's gencrous lamentation over the fallen, every heart muft fympathize with the following pathetic tribute to the sival lovers:

Brave Arnold and his rival ffrait remove,
Where Laura fhall befrew their hallow'd ground;
Protectors both, and ornaments of love;
This faid, his eyes out wept his wideft wound.
Telt her now thefe, love's faithful faints, are gone,
The beauty they ador'd fhe ought to hide; For vainly will love's miracles be fhewn,

Since lover's faith with thefe brave rivals dy'd.
Say littie Hago never more fhall moarn,
In noble numbers, her unkind difdain; Who now, not feeing beauty, feels no fcorn ; And wanting pleafure, is exempt from pain. Whenfhewith fowers Lord Arnold's grave fhall frew,

- And hears why Hugo's life was thrown away, She on that rival's hearfe will drop a few,

Which merits all that April gives to May.
The Duke now draws off his remaining friends towards Bergamo: but on the journey, journey, overcome by fatigue and lofs of blood, he falls into a deadly fwoon. His attendants, amidft their anxiety ạnd confufion upon this event, are furprifed, in the fixth canto, with the approach of a fquadron of horfe. This, however, proves to be a friendly body, led by old Ulfin, who, after recovering the Duke by a cordial, declares himfelf to have been a page to his grandfire, and gives a noble relation of the character and exploits of his great mafter. The rumour of Ofwald's attack brought him to the relief of Gondibert; and we have a defcription, which will be thought too much bordering upon the ludicrous, of the ftrange confufion among his maimed veterans, who in their hafte had feized upon each other's artificial limbs. This unfightly troop, with the deficiencies of hands, arms, legs and eyes, can fcarcely, with all the poet's art, be rendered a refpectable fpectable object. Such inftances of faulty judgment are frequent in the writings of an age which was charaEterized by vigour of imagination rather than correctnefs of tafte. Ulfin leads the Duke to the houfe of the fage Aftragon, where, with the approach of night, the canto and the firt book conclude.

I72 ON THE HEROIC POEM

In the beginning of the fecond book, the poet carries us with Hurgonil and Tybalt and their noble dead, to Verona. The diftant turrets firft appearing, and then the great objects opening, one by one; the river, the palace, the temple, and the amphitheatre of Flaminius, form a landfeape truly noble and picturefque. The view of the temple gives occafion to one of thofe elevated religious fentiments which dignify this poem.

> This to foothe heaven the bloody Clephes buit ;
> As if heaven's king fo foft and ealy were,

So meanly hous'd in heaven, and kind to guilt,
That he would be a tyrant's tenant here.
We have then a lively defcription of a city morning; with the various and uncertain rumours of the late event, among the people. The reft of the canto is employed in a debate, rather tedious, though intermixed with fine fentiments, concerning the propriety of granting funeral rites to thofe who had perifhed in the quarrel.

The progrefs of the fatal news is traced in the next canto. Aribert appears fitting in council in all the regal dignity. Tybalt relates the ftory. The king, in a majeftic fpeech, complains of the toils and cares of empire, and predicts the baneful confequences likely to enfue. A more interefting fcene is then difclofed, in which Tybalt deelares the melancholy events of the combat to Rhodalind and the other ladies of the court. Great art is fhewn in the delicate ambiguity by which they are prepared to receive the tidings. Laura is overpowered by her lofs; and, calling on Arnold's name, is conveyed away by her female attendants. This tender fcene of forrow is finely contrafted by the abrupt entrance of Gartha, in all the wild pomp of mingled rage and grief.

174 on the herolc poem

No fooner was the pity'd Laura gone, But Ofivald's fifter, Gartha the renown'd, Enters as if the world was overthrown, Or in the tears of the afflicted drown'd.

Unconquer'd as her beauty was her mind, Which wanted not a fpark of Ofwald's fire ; Ambition lov'd, but ne'er to love was kind; Vex'd thrones did more than quiet fhades defire.

Her garments now in loofe neglect fhe wore, As fuited to her wild difhevell'd hair.

In the fury of her paffion fhe breaks out into execrations againft the innocent.

Blafted be all your beauties, Rhodalind! Till you a fhame and terror be to fight; Unwing'd be Love, and flow as he is blind, Who with your looks poifon'd my brother's fight!

At length fhe mounts her chariot, and flies with the wings of revenge to the veteran camp at Brefcia. The terror impreffed on the people by her hafty departure is imaged with great fublimity.

She feem'd their city's Genius as fhe pals'd,
Who, by their fins expell'd, would ne'er return.

The third canto brings us to Brefcia, where Hubert's arrival with the dead body of Ofwald excites every emotion of furprize, grief and fury in the brealts of the brave veterans. They fpend the night in this ftorm of contending paffions; and at day-break affemble round the tent of Hubert, who by a noble harangue gives aditional fire to their revenge. They inftantly arm, and demand to be led to Bergamo; when Gartha arrives. She turns their vengeance againft the court, where fhe reprefents the triumph of Gondibert's faction, and the difhonour caft upon their own. The rage difcovered in her countenance, overpowering the fymptoms of grief, is painted with amazing grandeur in the following fimile :

The Sun did thus to threat'ned nature thow His anger red, whilft guilt look'd pale in all, When clouds of floods did hang about his brow; And then fhrunk back to let that anger fall.

This tempeft is, however, allayed in the next canto by the arrival of the wife Hermagild ;

Hermegild; who, though grown aged in war and politics, is poffeffed with a youthful paffion for Gartha. He folemnly binds his fervices to their party, for the reward of Gartha's love; but perfuades them to fubmit to more cautious and pacific meafures. Gartha returns with him to the court; and the funeral of Ofwald with Roman rites, "Which yet the world's laft law had not forbid," is defcribed in the remaining part of the canto.

From fcenes of rage and tumult the poet then leads us to the quiet fhades of philofophy in the houfe of Aftragon. This change is not better calculated for the reader's relief, than for a difplay of the richnefs and elevation of the writer's mind. That the friend of Hobbes fhould defpife the learned lumber of the fchools will not be thought extraordinary; but that he fhould diftinctly mark out fuch plans of acquiring knowledge as have fince been purfued with the greateft fuccefs, may well be deemed a remarkable proof of high and comprehenfive genius. In Aftragon's domain is a retired building, upon which is written in large letters, great nature's office. Herefit certain venerable fages, ftiled Nature's Regifers, bufied in recording what is brought them by a throng called their Intelligencers. Thefe men are diverfly employed in exploring the haunts of beafts, of birds, and of fifhes, and collecting obfervations of their manners $x_{x}$ their prey, their increafe, and every circumftance of their œconomy. Near this place is nature's nursery, focked with every fpecies of plants, of whiclr. the feveral properties and virtues are diligently examined. Is it not ftriking to find in the bouse of Aftragon fo exact a model of the fchool of Limneus?

We are next led to the cabinet of death; a receptacle for fkeletons and anatomical curiofities of every kind : and from thence; by a pleafing analogy, to the library, or, as it is termed, the monument of banish'd minds.' The feelings of his guefts on entering this room are thus defcribed:

Where, when they thought they faw in well-fought books Th' affembled fouls of all that men held wife, It bred fuch awful rev'rence in their looks As if they faw the bury'd writers rife.

The poet then goes throigh a particular furvey of the authors, diftinguifhed into their feveral periods, countries, and profeffions; in which he exhibits a great extent of learning, and, much more to his honour, a found and liberal judgment of what is truly valuable in learning. Of this, his account of the polemic divines will be thought no unfavourable fpecimen,

About this facred little book did ftand Unwieldy volumes, and in number great; And long it was fince any reader's hand Had reach'd them from their unfrequented feat.

For a deep duft (which time does foftly fhed, Where only time does come) their covers bear;
On which grave fpider's ftreets of webs had fpread, Subtle, and flight, as the grave writers were.

In thefe heaven's holy fire does vainly burn, Nor warms, nor lights, but is in fparkles fpent Where froward authors with difputes have torn The garment feamlefs as the firmament.

If the fubjects of this canto appear more noble and elevated than thofe which ufually employ the epifodes of heroic poetry, that of the enfuing one muft ftrike with fill fuperior dignity. Having aequainted us with the philofophy of his admired fage, the poet now, by a beautiful kind of allegory, inftructs us in his religion. Aftragon had dedicated three tomples, to PRAYER, to PENITENCE, and so praise. The Temple of Prayer is deferibed as a building quite plain, open, and without bells; fince nothing fhould tempt or fummon to an office to which our own wants invite us. The duty of Penitence being a feverity unpleafing to nature, its temple is contrived, by its folemn and uncommon appearance, to catch the fenfe. It is a vaft building of black marble, hung with black, and furnifhed with that " dim religious light" which poets have fo finely employed to excite kindred ideas of gloom and melancholy: but none, I think, have painted it with fuch ftrength of colouring as our author:

Black curtains hide the glafs; whilft from on high
A winking lamp ftill threatens all the room, As if the lazy flame juft now would die:

Such will the fun's laft light appear at doom.
A tolling bell calls to the temple; and every other circumftance belonging to it is imagined with great propriety and beauty.

But the poett's greateft exertions are. referved for his favourite temple of Praife. A general fhout of joy is the fummons to it. The building, in its materials and architecture, is gay and fplendid beyond the moft fumptuous palace. The front is adorned with figures of all kinds of mulical inftruments; all, as he moft beautifully expreffes it,

That joy did e'er invent, or breath infpir'd,
Or flying fingers touch'd into a voice.

The ftatues without, the pictures within, the decorations, and the choir of worfhippers, are all fuited with nice judgment, and defcribed with genuine poetry. This diftinguifhed canto concludes with there thefe noble ftanzas, the fum and moral, as it were, of the whole.

Praife is devotion fit for mighty minds; The diff'ring world's agreeing facrifice:
Where heaven divided faiths united finds:
But prayer in various difcord upward flies.
For Prayer the ocean is, where diverfly
Men fteer their courfe, each to a fev'ral coafts.
Where all our interefts fo difcordant be
That half beg winds by which the reft are loft.
By penitence when we ourfelves forfake,
'Tis but in wife defign on piteous heav'n; In praife we nobly give what God may take,

And are without a beggar's blufh forgiv'n.
Its utmoft force, like powder's, is unknown;
And tho' weak kings excefs of Praife may fear,
Yet when 'tis here, like powder, dangerous grown,
Heav'n's vault receives what would the palace tear.
The laft thought will be termed, in this cold age, a conceit ; and fo may every $\mathrm{N}_{4}$ thing 184 on the heroic poem shing that diftinguifhes wit and poetry from plain fenfe and profe.

The wonders of the boufe of Aftragon are not yet exhaufted.

To Aftragon heaven for fucceffion gave
One only pledge, and Birtha was her name.
This maid, her father's humble difciple and affiftant, educated in the bofom of rural fimplicity, is rendered a more charming object than even the renowned Rhodalind upon her throne,

Courts fhe ne'er faw, yet courts could have undon
With untaught looks and an unpractis'd heart; Her nets the moft prepar'd could never fhun,

For Nature fpread them in the forn of Art.
But I eheck my defire of copying more from this exquifitely pleafing picture. My intention is to excite curiofity, not to gratify it. I hope I have already done enough for that purpofe; and fince the reft of this unfinifhed ftory may be comprized in a fhort compafs, I fhall proceed, with but few interruptions, to conclude a paper already fwelled to an unexpected bulk.

That the unpractifed Birtha fhould entertain an unrefifted paffion for the nobleft of his fex; and that Gondibert, whofe want of ambition alone had fecured him from the charms of Rhodalind, fhould bow to thofe of his lovely hoftefs and handmaid, will be thought a very natural turn in the ftory; upon which, however, the reader may forefee the moft interefting events depending. The progrefs of their love, though fcarcely known to themfelves, is foon difcovered by the fage Aftragon. This is expreffed by the poet with a very fine tyurn of a common thought.

When all thefe fymptoms he obferv'd, he knows. From Alga, which is rooted deep in feas, To the high Cedar that on mountains grows, No fov'reign herb is found for their difeafe.

The remainder of, this poem, confifting of a third book, written during the author's imprifonment, is compofed of feveral detached fcenes, in which the main plot lies ripening for future action. Rivals are raifed to Birtha. Flattering advances from the court, and more open declarations of love from Rhodalind, are in vain employed to affail the conftancy of Gondibert. Various conflicts of paffion arife, and interefting fituations, well imagined, and painted in lively colours. Much is given, as in the former parts, to the introduction of elevated fentiment; with one example of which I fhall finifh my quotations. Several well-born youths are placed about the perfon of Gondibert as his pages, whole education confifts of the following great leffons from their lord:

But with the early fun he rofe, and taught Thefe youths by growing Virtue to grow great,
Shew'd greatnefs is without it blindly fought,
A defperate charge which ends in bafe retreat.

He taught them fhame, the fudden fenfe of ill;
Shame, nature's hafty confcience, which forbids Weak inclination ere it grows to will,
Or fays rafh will before it grows to deeds.

He taught them Honour, Virtue's bafhfuinefs;
A fort fo yieldlefs that it fears to treat;
Like power it grows to nothing, growing lefs; Honour, the moral confcience of the great.

He taught them Kindnefs; foul's civility,
In which, nor courts, nor cities have a part;
For theirs is fahion, this from falhood free,
Where love and pleafure know no luft nor art.

And Love he taught ; the foul's ftol'n vifit made
Tho' froward age watch hard, and law forbid;

1-88

 ON THE HEROIC POEMHer walks no fpy has trac'd, nor mountain faid;
Her friendfhip's caure is as the loadftone hid.

He taught them love of Toil ; Toil which does keep Obfractions from the mind, and quench the blood;
Eafe but belongs to us like fleep, and fleep,
'Like opium, is our med'cine, not our.food.

The plot is at length involved in fo many intricate and apparently unfurmountable difficulties, that it is fcarce poffible to conceive a fatisfactory termination. Perhaps the poet was fenfible of a want of power to extricate himfelf, and chofe thus to fubmit to a voluntary bankruptcy of invention, rather than hazard his reputation by going further. In his poffeript, indeed, he excufes himfelf on account of ficknefs and approaching diffolution. However difappointed we may be by his abrupt departure from fcenes which he has filled with confufion, we ought not to forget the pleafures already peady received from them. "If (fays he to his reader, with more than the firit of a dying man) thou art one of thofe who has been warmed with poetic fire, 1 reverence thee as my judge." From fuch a judicature, this nozle fragment, would, I doubt not, acquire for him what the critic laments his having loft, "the poffeffion of that true and permanent glory of which his large foul appears to have been full *."
OF CONDIBERT.

* Difc. on Poetical Imitatiom.

$$
(190)
$$

4 K

I N Q U I R Y

XNTO THOSE KINDS OF
D. $\quad 1 \quad \mathrm{~S} \quad \mathrm{~T} \quad \mathrm{R} \quad \mathrm{E} \quad \mathrm{S} \quad$ S
*HICH EXCITE

AGREEABLE SENSATIONS。

IT is undoubtedly true, though a phænomenon of the human mind difficult to account for, that the reprefentation of diftrefs frequently gives pleafure; from which general obfervation many of -ur modern writers of tragedy and romance mance feem to have drawn this inference, that in order to pleafe, they have nothing more to do than to paint diftrefs in natural and ftriking colours. With this view, they heap together all the afflicting events and difmal accidents their imagination can furnifh; and when they have half broke the reader's heart, they expect he fhould thank them for his agreeable entertainment. An author of this clafs fits down, pretty much like. an inquifitor, to compute how much fuffering he can inflict upon the hero of his tale before he makes an end of him; with this difference, indeed, that the inquifitor only tortures thofe who are at leaft reputed criminals; whereas the writer generally choofes the molt excellent character in his piece for the fubject of his perfecution. The great griterion of excellence is placed in being able to draw tears plentifully; and concluding we fhall weep the more, the more the picture is loaded with doleful events, they go on, telling —— of forrows upoa forrows Even to a lamentable length of woe.

192 AN EURUIRY

A monarch once propofed a rewarả for the difcovery of a new pleafure; but if any one could find out a new torture, or non-defcript calamity, he would be more entitled to the applaufe of thofe who fabricated books of entertainment.

But the fprings of pity require to be touched with a more delicate hand; and it is far from being true that we are agreeably affected by every thing that excites our fympathy. It fhall therefore be the bufinefs of this effay to diftinguifh thofe: kinds of diftrefs which are pleafing in the reprefentation, from thofe which are really painful and difgufting:

The view or relation of mere mifery can never be pleafing. We have; indeed; a ftrong fympathy with all kinds of mifery; but it is a feeling of pure unmixed pain, fimilar in kind, though not equal in degree, to what we feel for ourfelves on the like occafions; and never produces that melting forrow, that thrill of tendernefs, to which we give the name of pity: They are two diftinct fenfations, marked by very different external expreffion: One caufes the nerves to tingle, the flef to fhudder, and the whole countenance to be thrown into ftrong contractions the other relaxes the frame, opens the features, and produces tears. When we crufh a noxious or loathfome animal; we may fympathize ftrongly with the pain it fuffers, but with far different
(1) emotions
emotions from the tender fentiment we feel for the dog of Ulyfles, who crawled to meet his long-loft mafter, looked up, and died at his feet. Extreme bodily pain is perhaps the moft intenfe fuffering we are capable of, and if the fellow-feeling with mifery alone was grateful to the mind, the exhibition of a man in a fit of the tooth-ach, or under a chirurgical operation, would have a fine effect in a tragedy. But there muft be fome other fentiment combined with this kind of inftinctive fympathy, before it becomes in any degree pleafing, or produces the fweet emotion of pity. This fentiment is love, efteem, the complacency we take in the contemplation of beauty, of mental or moral excellence, called forth and rendered more interefting, by circumftances of pain and danger. Tendernefs is, much more properly than forrow, the fpring of tears; for it affects us in that manner; whether combined with joy or grief; perhaps more in the former cafe than the latter. And I believe we may venture to affert, that no diftrefs which produces tears is who!ly withotit a mixture of pleafure. When Jofeph's brethren were fent to buy corn, if they had perifhed in the defart by wild beafts, or been reduced (as in the horrid adventures of a Pierre de Vaud) to eat one another, we might have fhuddered, but we fhould not have wept for them. The guht of tears breaks forth when Jofeph made himfelf knöwn to his brethren, and fell on their neck, and kiffed them. When Hubert prepares to burn out prince Arthur's eyes, the fhocking circumftance, of itfelf, would only affect us with horror; it is the amiable fimplicity of the young prince, and his innocent affection to his intended murderer, that draws our tears,' and excites that tender forrow which we

$$
\mathrm{O}_{2} \quad \text { love }
$$

love to feel, and which refines the heart while we do feel it.

We fee, therefore, from this view of our internal feelings, that no fcenes of mifery ought to be exhibited which are not connected with the difplay of fome moral excellence, or agreeable quality. If fortitude, power, and ftrength of mind are called forth, they produce the fublime feelings of wonder and admiration: if the fofter qualities of gentlenefs, grace, and beauty, they infpire love and pity. The management of thefe latter emotions is our prefent object.

And let it be remembered, in the firft place, that the misfortunes which excite pity muft not be too horrid and overwhelming. The mind is rather ftunnedthan foftened by great calamities. They $\|$ are little circumftances that work moft fenfibly fenfibly upon the tender feelings. For this reafon, a well-written novel generally draws more tears than a tragedy. The diftreffes of tragediy are more calculated to amaze and terrify, than to move compaffion. Battles, torture and death are in every page. The dignity of the characters, the importance of the events, the pomp of verfe and imagery intereft the grander paffions, and raife the mind to an enthufiafm little favourable to the weak and languid notes of pity. The tragedies of Young are in a fine ftrain of poetry, and the fituations are worked up with great energy; but the pictures are in too deep a made: all his pieces are full of violent and gloomy paffions, and fo over-wrought with horror, that inftead of awakening any pleafing fenfibility, they leave on the mind an impreffion of fadnefs mixed with terror. Shakefpeare is fometimes guilty of prefenting fcenes too $\mathrm{O}_{3}$ fhocking:
fhocking. Such is the trampling out of Glofter's eyes ; and fuch is the whole play of Titus Andronicus. , But Lee, beyond all others, abounds with this kind of images. He delighted in painting the moft daring crimes, and cruel maffacres ; and though he has fhewn himfelf extremely capable of raifing tendernefs, he continually checks its courfe by fhocking and difagreeable expreffions. His pieces are in the fame tafte with the pictures of Spagnolet, and there are many fcenes in his tragedies which no one can relifh who would not look with pleafure on the flaying of St. Bartholomew. The following fpeech of Marguerite, in the maffacre of Paris, was, I fuppofe, intended to exprefs. the utmoft tendernefs of affection.

Die for him! that's too litt'e ; I could burn Fiece-meal away, or bleed to death by drops, B'e flay'd alive, then breke upon the wheel, Yet with a fmile endure it all for Guife;

And when let loofe from torments, all one wound, Run with my mangled arms and crufh him dead.

Imagrs like thefe will never excite the fofter paffions. We are lefs moved at the defcription of an Indian tortured with all the dreadful ingenuity of that favage people, than with the fatal miftake of the lover in the Spectator, who pierced an artery in the arm of his miftrefs as he was letting her blood. Tragedy and ro- 11 mạnce-writers are likewife apt to make too free with the more violent expreffions of paffion and diftrefs, by which means they lofe their effect. Thus an ordinary author does not know how to exprefs any ftrong emotion otherwife than by fwoonings or deatl; fo that a perfon experienced in this kind of reading, when a girl faints away at parting with her lover, or a hero kills himfelf for the lofs of his miftrefs, confiders it as the eftablifhed O 4 etiquette
200. AN ENQUIRY
etiquette upon fuch occafions, and turns over the pages with the utmoft coolnefs and unconcern! ; whereas real fenfibility, and a more intimate knowledge of human nature, would have fuggefted a thoufand lietle touches of grief, which though flight, are irrefifible. We are too gloomy a people. Some of the French novels are remarkable for little affecting incidents, imagined with delicacy, and told with grace. Perhaps they have a better turn than we have for this kind of writing.

A judicious author will never attempt to raife pity by any thing mean or difguting. As we have already obferved, there mutt be a degree of complacence mixed with our forrows to prodace an agreeable fympathy ; nothing, therefore, mut be admitted which deftroys the grace and dignity of fuffering; the imagination muft have an amiable figure to dwel!

concerning distress, & 2 c. 201

dwell upon; there are circumftances fo ludicrous or difgufting, that no character. can preferve a proper decorum under them, or appear in an agrecable light. Who can read the following defcription of Polypheme without finding his compaffion entirely deftroyed by averfion and loathịng ?

His bloody hand

Snatch'd two unhappy of my martial band, And dafh'd like dogs againtt the fony floor, The pavement fwims with brains and mingled gore; Torn limb from limb, he fpreads his borrid feaft, And fierce devours it like a mountain beatt, He fucks the marrow, and the blood he drains, Nor entrails, flefh, nor folid bone remains.

Or that of Scylla,

In the wide dungeon the devours her food, And the flefh trembles while fhe churns the blood.

Deformity is always difgufting, and the imagination cannot reconcile it with the idea of a favourite character; therefore the poet and romance-writer are fully juftified in giving a larger thare of beauty to their principal figures than is ufually met with in common life. A late genius, indeed, in a whimfical mood, gave us a lady with her nofe crufhed for the heroine of his ftory; but the circumftance fpoils the picture ; and though in the courfe of the ftory it is kept a good deal out of fight, whenever it does recur' to the imagination we are hurt and difgufted. It was an heroic inftance of virtue in the nuns of a certain abbey, who cut off their noles and lips to avoid violation; yet this would make a very bad fubject for a poem or a play. Something akin to this is the reprefentation of any thing unnatural; of which kind is the famous ftory of the Roman charity, and for this reafon I cannot but think it an unpleafing fubject for either the pen or the pencil.

CONCERNING DISTRESS, &c. 203

Poverty, if truly reprefented, fhocks our nicer feelings; therefore, whenever it is made ufe of to awaken our compaffion, the rags and dirt, the fqualid appearance and mean employments incident to that fate muft be kept out of fight, and the diftrefs muft arife from the idea of depreffion, and the fhock of falling from higher fortunes. We do not pity Belifarius as a poor blind beggar; and a painter would fucceed very ill who fhould fink him to the meannefs of that condition. He muft let us ftill difcover the conqueror of the Vandals, the general of the imperial armies, or we fhall be little interefted. Let us look at the picture of the old woman in Otway:
——A wrinkled hag with age grown double, Picking dry kicks, and muttering to herfelf; Her eyes with icalding rheum were gall'd and red; Cold palfie fhook her head; her hands feem'd wither'd; And on her crooked fhoulder had fhe wrapt 'The tattei' C remnant of an old Arip'd hanging, Which ferv'd to keep her carcafe from the cold; So there was nothing of a piece about her.

Here is the extreme of wretchednefs, and inftead of melting into pity, we fhould turn away with difguft, if we were not pleafed with it, as we are with a Dutch painting, from its exact imitation of nature. Indeed the author only intended it to ftrike horror. But how different are the fentiments we feel for the lovely $\mathrm{Bel}_{7}$ videra! We fee none of thofe circumftances which render poverty an unamiable thing. When the goods are feized by an execution, our attention is turned to the piles of mafly plate, and all the ancient, mof domeffic ornaments, which imply grandeur and confequence; or to fuch inftances of their hard fortune as will lead us to pity them as lovers: we are ftruck and affected with the general face of ruin ; but we are not brought near enough to difcern the uglinefs of its features. Belvidera ruined, Belvidera deprived of friends; without a home, abandoned to the wide world-we can contemplate with all the pleafing. fympathy of pity; but had fhe been reprefented as really funk into low life, had we feen her employed in the moft fervile ${ }^{\circ}$ offices of poverty, our compafion would have given way to contempt and difguft. Indeed, we may obferve in real life, that poverty is only pitied fo long as people can keep themfelves from the effects of it. When in common language we fay a mijerable object, we mean an object of diftrefs which, if we relieve, we turnaway from at the fame time. To make pity pleafing, the object of it mult not in any view be difagreeable to the imagination.
tion. How admirably has the author of Clariffa managed this point? Amidft fcenes of fuffering which rend the heart, in poverty, in a prifon, under the moft fhocking outrages, the grace and delicacy of her character never fuffers even for a moment ; there feems to be a charm about her which prevents her receiving a ftain from any thing whick happens; and Clariffa, abandoned and undone, is the object not only of complacence, but veneration.

I would likewife obferve, that if an author would have us feel a ftrong degree of compaffion, his characters muft not be too perfect. The ftern fortitude and inflexible refolution of a Cato may command efteem, but does not excite tendernefs; and faultlefs rectitude of conduct; though no rigour be mixed with it; is of too fublime a nature to infpire compaffion. Virtue has a kind of felffufficiency ; it ftands upon its own bafis; and cannot be injured by any violence. It muft therefore be mixed with fomething of helpleffnefs and imperfection, with an exceffive fenfibility, or a fimplicity bordering upon weaknefs, before it raifes, in any great degree, either tendernefs or familiar love. If there be a fault in the mafterly performance juft now mentioned, it is that the character of Clariffa is fo inflexibly right, her paffions are under luch perfect command, and her prudence is fo equal to every occafion, that fhe feems not to need that fympathy we fhould beftow upon one of a lefs elevated character; and perhaps we fhould feel a livelier emotion of tendernefs for the innocent girl whom Lovelace calls his Rofe-bud, but that the ftory of Clariffa is fo worked up by the ftrength of colouring, and the force of repeated impreffions, as to command all our forrow.

Pity feems too degrading a fentimend to be offered at the fhrine of faultlefs excellence. The fufferings of martyrs are rather beheld with admiration and fympathetic triumph than with tears; and we never feel much for thofe whom we confider as themfelves raifed above common feelings.

- The laft rule I fhall infift upon is, that fcenes of diftrefs hould not be too long continued. All our finer feelings are in a manner momentary, and no art can carry them beyond a certain point; either in intenfenefs or duration. Conftant fuffering deadens the heart to tender impreffions; as we may obferve in failors; and others who are grown callous by a life of continual hardihips. It is therefore highly neceffary, in a long work, to relieve the mind by fcenes of pleafure and gaiety; and I cannot think it fo abfwre
furd a practice as our modern delicacy has reprefented it, to intermix wit and fancy with the pathetic, provided care be taken not to check the paffions while they are flowing. The tranfition from a pleafurable ftate of mind to tender forrow is not fo difficult as we imagine. When the mind is opened by gay and agreeable fcenes, every impreffion is felt more fenfibly. Perfons of a lively temper are much more fufceptible of that fudden fwell of fenfibility which occafions tears, than thofe of a grave and faturnine caft: for this reafon women are more eafily moved to weeping than men. Thofe who have touched the fprings of pity with the fineft hand, have mingled light ftrokes of pleafantry and mirth in their moft pathetic paffages. Very different is the conduct of many novel-writers, who, by plunging us into fcenes of diftrefs without end or limit, exhauft the powers, and before the conclufion either render us infenfible to every thing, or fix a real fadnefs upon the mind. The uniform ftile of tragedies is one reafon why they affect fo little. In our old plays, all the force of language is referved for the more interefting parts; and in the feenes of common life there is no attempt to rife above common language: whereas we, by that pompous manner and affected folemnity which we think it neceffary to preferve through the whole piece, lofe the force of an elevated or paffionate expreffion where the occafion really fuggefts it.

Having thus confidered the manner in which fictitious diftrefs mutt be managed to render it pleafing, let us refleet a little upon the moral tendency of fuch reprefentations. Much has been faid in favour of them, and they are generally thought thought to improve the tender and humane feelings; but this, I own, appears to me very dubious. That they exercife fenfibility, is true; but fenfibility does not increafe with exercife. By the conftitution of our frame our habits increafe, our emotions decreafe, by repeated acts; and thus a wife provifion is made, that as our compaffion grows weaker, its pläce fhould be fupplied by habitual benevolence. Bur in thefe writings our fenfibility is ftrongly called forth without any poffibility of exerting itfelf in virtuous action, and thofe emotions, which we fhall never feel again with equal force, are wafted without advantage. Nothing is more dangerous than to let virtuous imprefions of any kind pafs through the mind without pro-ducing their proper effect. The awakenings of remorfe, virtuous thame and indignation, the glow of moral approba-chon-if they do not lead to a ation, grow $P=\quad$ le $\sqrt{3}$ lefs and lefs vivid every time they recur; till at length the mind grows abfolutely callous. The being affected with a pathetic ftory is undoubtedly a fign of an amiable difpofition, but perhaps no means of increafing it. On the contrary, young people, by a courfe of this kind of reading, often acquire fomething of that apathy and indifference which the experience of real life would have given them, without its advantages.

Another realon why plays and romances do not improve our humanity is, that they lead us to require a certain elegance of manners and delicacy of virtue which is not often found with poverty, ignorance and meannefs. The objects of pity in romance are as different from thofe in real life as our hufbandmen from the fhepherds of Arcadia; and a girl who will fit weeping the whole night at the the delicate diftreffes of a lady Charlotte, or lady Julia, fhall be little moved at the complaint of her neighbour, who, in a homely phrafe and vulgar accent, laments to her that fhe is not able to get bread for her family. Romance-writers likewife make great misfortunes fo familiar to our ears, that we have hardly any pity to fpare for the common accidents of life : but we ought to remember, that mifery has a claim to relief, however we may be difgufted with its appearance ; and that we muft not fancy ourfelves charitable, when we are only pleafing our imagination.

It would perhaps be better, if our romances were more like thofe of the old ftamp, which tended to raife human nature, and infpire a certain grace and dignity of manners of which we have hardly the idea. The high notions of $\mathrm{P}_{3}$ honour, 214 AN ENCUIRY, \&C.

honour, the wild and fanciful fpirit of adventure and romantic love, elevated the mind; our novels tend to deprefs and enfeeble it. Yet there is a fpecies of this kind of writing which muft ever afford an exquifite pleafure to perfons of tafte and fenfibility; where noble fentiments are mixed with well-fancied incidents, pathetic touches with dignity and grace, and invention with chafte correctnefs. Such will ever intereft our fweeteft paffions. I fhall conclude this paper with the following tale.

$$
\text { ATALE. } \quad 215
$$

IN the happy period of the golden age, when all the celeftial inhabitants deicended to the earth, and converfed familiarly with mortals, among the moft cherifhed of the heavenly powers were twins, the offspring of Jupiter, Love and Joy. Where they appeared, the flowers fprung up beneath their feet, the fun fhone with a brighter radiance, and all nature feemed embellifhed by their prefence. They were infeparable companions, and their growing attachment was favoured by Jupiter, who had decreed that a lafting union fhould be folemnized between them as foon

216
A TALE.
as they were arrived at maturer years, But in the mean time the fons of men deviated from their native innocence; vice and ruin over-ran the earth with giant ftrides; and Aftrea, with her train of celeftial vifitants, forfook their polluted abodes. Love alone remained, having been ftolen away by Hope, who was his nurfe, and conveyed by her to the forefts of Arcadia, where he was brought up among the Mepherds. But Jupiter , affigned him a different partner, and commanded him to efpoufe sorrow, the daughter of Até. He complied with reluctance; for her features were harfh and difagreeable, her eyes funk, her forehead contracted into perpetual wrinkles, and her temples were covered with a wreath of cyprefs and wormwood. From this union fprung a virgin, in whom might be traced a ftrong refemblance to both her parents;
but the fullen and unamiable features of her mother were fo mixed and blended with the fweetnefs of her father, that her countenance, though mournful, was highly pleafing. The maids and thepherds 'of the neighbouring plains gathered round, and called her pity. A red-breaft was obferved to build in the cabin where fhe was born; and while fhe was yet an infant, a dove, purfued by a hawk, flew into her bofom. This nymph had a dejected appearance, but fo foft and gentle a mien that fhe was beloved to a degree of enthufiafm. Her voice was low and plaintive, but inexpreffibly fweet; and fhe loved to lie for hours together on the banks of fome wild and melancholy ftream, finging to her lute. She taught men to weep, for fhe took a ftrange delight in tears; and often, when the virgins of the hamlet were affembled at their evening fports, fhe fhe would fteal in amongt them, and captivate their hearts by her tales full of a charming fadnefs. She wore on her head a garland compofed of her father's myrtles twifted with her mother's cyprefs.

One day, as fhe fat mufing by the waters of Helicon, her tears by chance fell into the fountain; and ever fince, the Mufes' fpring has retained a ftrong tafte of the infufion. Pity was commanded by Jupiter to follow the fteps of her mother through the world, dropping balm into the wounds the made, and bincing up the hearts fhe had broken. She follows with her hair loofe, her bofom bare and throbbing, her garments torn by the briars, and her feet bleeding with the roughnefs of the path. The nymph is mortal, for her mother is fo; and when fhe has fulfilled her deftined deftined courfe upon the earth, they fhall both expire together, and love be again united to joy, his immortal and.longbetrothed bride.

(220)

$$
\begin{aligned}
& \text { THOUGHTS } \\
& \text { ON тнz }
\end{aligned}
$$

DEVOTIONALTASTE, 0 on S.E C T S,

AND ON ESTABLISHMENTS.

IT is obferved by a late moft amiable and elegant writer, that Religion may be confidered in three different views. As a fyftem of opinions, its fole object is truth; and the only faculty that has any thing to do with it is Reafon, exerted

Note. This Effay was firt printed in 1775, and prefixed to Dervotional Pieces compiled from the Pfalms of David.
in the freeft and moft difpaffionate enquiry. As a principle regulating our conduct, Religion is a habit, and like all other habits, of flow growth, and gaining ftrength only by repeated exertions. But it may likewife be confidered as a tafte, an affair of fentiment and feeling; and in this fenfe it is properly called Devotion. Its feat is in the imagination and the paffions, and it has its fource in that relifh for the fublime, the vaft, and the beautiful, by which we tafte the charms of poetry and other compofitions that addrefs our finer feelings; rendered more lively and interefting by a fenfe of gratitude for perfonal benefits. It is in a great degree conftitutional, and is by no means found in exact proportion to the virtue of a character.

İ is with relation to this làrt view of the fubject that the obfervations in this

1. effay
effay are hazarded: for though, as a tule of life, the authority and falutary effects of religion are pretty univerfally acknow. ledged, and though its tenets have been defended with fufficient zeal, its affections languif, the fpirit of Devotion is certainly at a very low ebb amongft us, and what is furprifing, it has fallen, I know not how, into a certain contempt, and is treated with great indifference, amongft many of thofe who value themfelves on the purity of their faith, and who are diftinguifhed by the fweetnefs of their morals. As the religious affections in a great meafure rife and fall with the pulfe, and are affected by every thing which acts upon the imagination, they are apt to run into ftrange exceffes; and if directed by a melancholy or enthufiaftic faith, their workings are often too ftrong for a weak head, or a delicate frame; and for this reafon they have been almoft excluded excluded from religious worfhip by many perfons of real piety. It is the charafter of the prefent age to allow little to fentiment, and all the warm and generous emotions are treated as romantic by the fupercilious brow of a cold-hearted philofophy. The man of fcience, with an air of fuperiority, leaves them to fome florid declaimer who profeffes to work upon the paffions of the lower clafs, where they are fo debafed by noife and nonfenfe, that it is no won?er if they move difguft in thofe of elegant and better-informed minds.
$\mathrm{Y}_{\mathrm{ET}}$ there is a devotion, generous, liberal, and humane, the child of more exalted feelings than bafe minds can enter into, which afimilates man to higher natures, and lifts him "above this vifible diurnal fphere." Its pleafures are ultimate, and, when caily cultivated, continue

224 THOUGHTS ON THE
continue vivid even in that uncomfortable feafon of life when fome of the paffions are extinct, when imagination is dead, and the heart begins to contract within itfelf. Thofe who want this tafte; want a fenfe, a part of their nature, and Thould not prefume to judge of feelings to which they muft ever be ftrangers: No one pretends to be a judge in poetry or the fine arts, who has not both a natural and a cultivated relifh for them; and thall the narrow-minded children of earth, abforbed in low purfuits, dare to treat as vifionary, objects which they have never made themfelves acquainted with ? Silence on fuch fubjects will better become them. But to vindicate the pleafures of cevotion to thofe who have neither tafte nor knowledge about them, is not the prefent object. It rather deferves our enquiry, what caufes have contributed to check the operations of religious religious impreffions amongt thofe who have fteady principles, and are well difpofed to virtue.

And, in the firft place, there is nothing, more prejudicial to the feelings of a devout heart, than a habit of difputing on religious fubjects. Free enquiry is undoubtedly neceffary to eftablifh a rational belief; but a difputatious fpirit, and fondnefs for controverfy, give the mind a fceptical turn, with an aptnefs to call in queftion the moft eftablifhed truths. It is impoffible to preferve that deep reverence for the Deity with which we ought to regard him, when all his attributes, and even his very exiftence; become the fubject of familiar debate. Candor demands that a man fhould allow his opponent an unlimited freedom of feeech, and it is not eafy in the heat of difcourfe to avoid falling into an indecent or carelefs expreffion; hence thofe who think feldomer of religious fubjects, often treat them with mole refpect than thofe whofe profeffion keeps them conftantly in their view. A plain man of a ferious turn would probably be fhocked to hear queftions of this nature treated with that eafe and negligence with which they are generally difcuffed by the practifed Theologian, or the young lively Academic ready primed from the fchools of logic and metaphyfics. As the ear lofes its delicacy by being obliged only to bear coarfe and vulgar language, fo the veneration for religion wears off by hearing it treated with difregard, though we ourfelves are employed in defending it ; and to this it is owing that many who have confirmed themfelves in the belief of religion, have never been able to recover that ftrong and affectionate fenfe of it which they had before they began to enquire devotional taste, &c.
enquire, and have wondered to find their devotion grown weaker when their faith was better grounded. Indeed, ftrong reafoning powers and quick feelings do not often unite in the fame perfon. Men of a fcientific turn feldom lay their hearts open to impreffion. Previoully biaffed by the love of fyitem, they do indeed attend the offices of religion, but they dare not truft themfelves with the preacher, and are continually upon the watch to obferve whether every fentiment agrees with their own particular tenets.

The fpirit of enquiry is eafily diftinguifhed from the fpirit of difputation. A ftate of doubt is not a pleafant flate. It is painful, anxious, and diftreffing beyond moft others: it difpofes the mind to dejection and modefty. Whoever therefore is fo unfortunate as not to have fettled his opinions in important points, will proceed in the fearch of truth with deep humility, unaffected earneftnefs, and a ferious attention to every argument that may be offered, which he will be much rather inclined to revolve in his own mind, than to ufe as materials for difpute. Even with thefe difpofitions, it is happy for a man when he does not find much to alter in the religious fyftem he has embraced; for if that undergoes a total revolution, his religious feelings are too generally fo weakened by the fhock, that they hardly recover again their original tone and vigour.

$$
Q_{2} \quad \text { proceed }
$$

Shall we mention Philofophy as an enemy to religion? God forbid! Philofophy,

> Daughter of Heaven, that flow afcending fill Invertigating fure the form of things With radiant finger points to heaven again.

Yet there is a view in which fhe exerts an influence perhaps rather unfavourable to the fervor of fimple piety. Philofophy does indeed enlarge our conceptions of the Deity, and gives us the fublimeft ideas of his power and extent of dominion ; but it raifes him too high for our imaginations to take hold of, and in a great meafure deftroys that affectionate regard which is felt by the common clafs of pious Chriftians. When, after contemplating the numerous productions of this earth, the various forms of being, the laws, the mode of their exiftence, we rife yet higher, and turn our eyes to that magnificent profufion of funs and fyitems which aftronomy pours upon the mind When we grow acquainted with the majeftic order of nature, and thofe eternal laws which bind the material and intellectual worlds-When we trace the footteps of creative energy through re= gions of unmeafured fpace, and ftill find new wonders difclofed and preffing upon the view-we grow giddy with the profpect; the mind is aftonifhed, confounded at its own infignificance; we think it almoft impiety for a worm to lift its head from the duft, and addrefs the Lord of fo ftupendous a univerfe; the idea of communion with our Maker fhocks us as prefumption, and the only feeling the foul is capable of in fuch a moment is a deep and painful fenfe of its own abafement. It is true, the fame philofophy teaches that the Deity is intimately prefent through every part of this complicated fyftem, and neglects not any of his works: but this is a truth which is believed without being felt; our imagination cannot here keep pace with our reafon, and the fovereign of nature feems ever further removed from us in proportion as we enlarge the bounds of his creation.

230 . THOUGHTS ON THE

Philosophy

$$
\text { Devotional taste, &C. } 23 \mathrm{I}
$$

Philosophy reprefents the Deity in too abftracted a manner to engage our affections. A Being without hatred and without fondnefs, going on in one fteady courfe of even benevolence, neither delighted with praifes, nor moved by importunity, does not intereft us fo much as a character open to the feelings of indignation, the foft relentings of mercy, and the partialities of particular affections. We require fome common nature, or at leaft the appearance of it, on which to build our intercourfe. It is alfo a fault of which philofophers are often guilty, that they dwell too much in generals. Accuftomed to reduce every thing to the operation of general laws, they turn our attention to larger views, attempt to grafp the whole order of the univerfe, and in the zeal of a fyitematic fpirit. feldom leave room for thofe parficular and perfonal mercies which are Q4 the the food of gratitude. They trace the great outline of nature, but neglect the colouring which gives warmth and beauty to the piece. As in poetry it is not vague and general defcription, but a few ftriking circumftances clearly related and ftrongly worked up-as in a landfcape it is not fuch a vaft extenfive range of country as pains the eye to ftretch to its limits, but a beautiful, well-defined profpect, which gives the moft pleafurefo neither are thofe unbounded views in which philofophy delights, fo much calculated to touch the heart as home views and nearer objects. The philofopher offers up general praifes on the aliar of univerfal nature; the devout man, on the altar of his heart, prefents his own fighs, his own thankfgivings, his own earneft defires: the former worfhip is more fublime, the latter more perfonal and affecting:

We are likewife too fcrupulous in our public exercifes, and too ftudious of accuracy. A prayer ftrictly philofophical muft ever be a cold and dry compofition. From an over-anxious fear of admitting any expreffion that is not ftrictly proper, we are apt to reject all warm and pathetic imagery, and, in fhort, every thing that ftrikes upon the heart and the fenfes. But it may be faid, ' If the Deity be indeed fo fublime a being, and if his defigns and manner are fo infinitely beyond our comprehenfion, how can a thinking mind join in the addreffes of the vulgar, or avoid being overwhelmed with the indiftinct vaftnefs of fuch an idea. Far be it from me to deny that awe and veneration muft ever make a principal part of our regards to the Mafter of the univerfe, or to defend that ftyle of indecent familiarity which is yet more fhocking than indifference: but let it be confidered that we cannot hope to avoid all improprieties in fpeaking of fuch a Being ; that the moft philofophical addrefs we can frame is probably no more free from them than the devotions of the vulgar; that the fcriptures fet us an example of accommodating the language of prayer to common conceptions, and making ufe of figures and modes of expreffion far from being ftrictly defenfible; and that, upon the whole, it is fafer to truft to our genuine feelings, feelings implanted in us by the God of nature, than to any metaphyfical fubtleties. He has impreffed me with the idea of truft and confidence, and my heart flies to him in danger ; of mercy to forgive, and I melt before him in penitence ; of bounty to beftow, and I afk of him all I want or wifh for. I may make ufe of an inaccurate expreffion, I may paint him to my imagination too much in the fafhion of humanity; but while my heart is pure, while I depart not from the line of moral duty, the error is not dangerous. Too critical a fpirit is the bane of every thing great or pathetic. In our creeds let us be guarded; let us there weigh every fyllable; but in compofitions addreffed to the heart, let us give freer fcope to the language of the affections, and the overflowing of a warm and generous difpofition.

Another caufe which moft effectually. operates to check devotion, is ridicule. I fpeak not here of open derifion of things facred; but there is a certain ludicrous ftyle in talking of fuch fubjects, which, without any ill defign, does much harm; and perhaps thofe whofe ftudies or profeffion lead them to be chiefly converfant with the offices of religion, are moft apt to fall in to this impropriety; for their ideas ideas being chiefly taken from that fource, their common converfation is apt to be tinctured with fanciful allufions to fcripture expreffions, to prayers, &xc. which have all the effect of a parody, and, like parodies, deftroy the force of the fineft paffage, by affociating it with fomething trivial and ridiculous. Of this nature is Swift's well-known jeft of " Dearly beloved Roger," which whoevér has ftrong upon his memory, will find it impoffible to attend with proper ferioufnefs to that part of the fervice. We fhould take great care to keep clear from all thefe trivial affociations, in whatever we wifh to be regarded as venerable.

Another fpeciés of ridicule to be avoided, is that kind of fneer often thrown upon thofe whofe hearts are giving way to honeft emotion. There is an extreme delicacy in all the finer affections, which makes them fhy of obfervation, and eafily checked. Love, Wonder, Pity, the enthufiafm of Poetry, fhrink from the notice of even an indifferent eye, and never indulge themfelves freely but in folitude, or when heightened by the powerful force of fympathy. Obferve an ingenuous youth at a well-wrought tragedy. If all around him are moved, he fuffers his tears to flow freely; but if a fingle eye meets him with a glance of contemptuous indifference, he can no longer enjoy his forrow ; he blufhes at having wept, and in a moment his heart is fhut up to every impreffion of tendernefs. It is fometimes mentioned as a reproach to Proteftants, that they are fufceptible of a falfe fhame when obferved in the exercifes of their religion, from which Papifts are free. But I take this to proceed from the purer nature nature of our religion; for the lefs it is made to confift in outward pomp and mechanical worhip, and the more it has to do with the finer affections of the heart, the greater will be the referve and delicacy which attend the expreffion of its fentiments. Indeed, ridicule ought to be very fparingly ufed; for it is an enemy to every thing fublime or tender : the leaft degree of it, whether well or ill founded, fuddenly and inftantaneoully ftops the workings of paffion; and thofe who indulge a talent that way, would do well to confider, that they are rendering themfelves for ever incapable of all the higher pleafures either of tafte or morals. More efpecially do thefe cold pleafantries hurt the minds of youth, by checking that generous expanfion of heart to which their open tempers are naturally prone, and producing a vicious fhame, through which they are deprived of the enjoy-

```
devotional taste, &c.
enjoyment of heroic fentiments or generous action.

In the next place, let us not be fuperftitioully afraid of fuperftition. It fhews great ignorance of the human heart, and the fprings by which its paffions are moved, to neglect taking advantage of the impreffion which particular circumftances, times and feafons, naturally make upon the mind. The root of all fuperftition is the principle of the affociation of ideas, by which, objects naturally indifferent become dear and venerable, through their connection with interefting ones. It is true, this principle has been much abufed: it has given rife to pilgrimages innumerable, worfhip of relics, and prieftly power. But let us not carry our ideas of purity and fimplicity fo far as to neglect it entirely. Superior natures, it is poffible, may be equally affected with the fame truths at all times \({ }_{3}\) and in all places; but we are not fo made. Half the pleafures of elegant minds are derived from this fource. Even the enjoyments of fenfe, without it, would lofe much of their attraction. Who does not enter into the fentiment of the Poet, in that paffage fo full of nature and truth:
- He that outlives this hour, and comes fafe home,
- Shall ftand on tiptoe when this day is named,
- And roufe him at the name of Crifpian:
- He that outlives this day and fees old age,
- Will yearly on the vigil feaft his neighbours,
- And fay, To-morrow is St. Crifpian.'

But were not the benefits of the victory equally, apparent on any other day of the year? Why commemorate the anniverfary with fuch diftinguifhed regard ? Thofe who can afk fuch a queftion, have never attended to fome of the ftrongeft inftincts inftinets in our nature. Yet it has lately been the fafhion, amongft thole who call. themfelves rational Chriftians, to treat as puerile, all attentions of this nature when relative to religion. They would

> Kifs with pious lips the facred earth Which gave a Hampden or a Ruffel birth.

They will vifit the banks of Avon with all the devotion of enthufiaftic zeal; celebrate the birth-day of the hero and the patriot; and yet pour contempt upon the Chriftian who fuffers himfelf to be warmed by fimilar circumftances relating to his Mafter, or the connection of fentiments of peculiar reverence with times, places, and men which have been appropriated to the fervice of religion. A wife preacher will not, from a faftidious refinement, difdain to affect his hearers from the feafon of the year, the anniverfary of a national bleffing, a reR markable

242 THOUGHTS ON THE
markable efcape from danger, or, in fhort, any incident that is fufficiently guarded, and far enough removed from what is trivial, to be out of danger of becoming ludicrous.

It will not be amifs to mention here, a reproach which has been caft upon devotional writers, that they are apt to run into the language of love. Perhaps the charge would be full as juft, had they faid that Love borrows the language of Devotion; for the votaries of that paffion are fond of ufing thofe exaggerated expreffions, which can fuit nothing below Divinity; and you can hardly addrefs the greateft of all Beings in a ftrain of more profound adoration, than the lover ufes to the object of his attachment. But the truth is, Devotion does in no fmall degree refemble-that fanciful and elevated kind of love which depends not on the fenfes.

\section*{deviotional taste, & c. 273}
renfes. Nor is the likenefs to be wondered at, fince both have their fource in the love of beauty and excellence. Both are exceeding prone to fuperftition, and apt to run into romantic exceffes. Both are nourifhed by poetry and mufic, and felt with the greateft fervour in the warmer climates. Both carry the mind out of itfelf, and powerfully refine the affections from every thing grofs, low; and felfifh.

But it is time to retire; we are treading upon enchanted ground, and fhall be fufpected by many of travelling towards the regions of chivalry and old romance. And were it fo, many a fair majeftic idea might be gathered from thofe forgotten walks, which would well anfwer the trouble of tranfplanting. It muft however be owned, that very improper language has formerly been ufed on thefe R 2 fubjects;

244 THOUGHTS ON THE
fubjects; but there cannot be any great danger of fuch exceffes, where the mind is guarded by a rational faith, and the focial affections have full fcope in the free commerce and legitimate connections of fociety.

Having thus confidered the various caufes which contribute to deaden the feelings of devotion, it may not be foreign to the fubject to enquire in what manner they are affected by the different modes of religion. I fpeak not of opinions; for thefe have much lefs influence upon the heart, than the circumftances which attend particular perfuafions. A fect may only differ from an eftablifhment, as one abfurd opinion differs from another: but there is a character and caft of manners belonging to each, which will be perfectly diftinct; and of a fect, the character will vary as it is a rifing or a declining

\section*{devotional taste, & 245}
clining fect, perfecuted or at eafe. Yet while divines have wearied the world with canvaffing contrary doctrines and jarring articles of faith, the philofopher has not confidered, as the fubject deferved, what fituation was moft favourable to virtue, fentiment, and pure manners. To a philofophic eye, free from prejudice, and accuftomed to large views of the great polity carried on in the moral world, perhaps varying and oppofite forms may appear proper, and well calculated for their refpective ends; and he will neither wifh entirely to deftroy the old, nor wholly to crufh the new.

The great line of divifion between different modes of religion, is formed by Eftablifhments and Sects. In an infant fect, which is always in fome degree a perfecuted one, the ftrong union and entire affection of its followers, the facri-
R 3 fices
fices they make to principle, the force of novelty, and the amazing power of fympathy, all contribute tọ cherifh devotion. It rifes even to paffion, and abforbs every other fentiment. Severity of manners impofes refpect; and the earneftnefs of the new profelytes renders them infenfible to injury, or even to rịdicule, A ftraịn of eloquence, often coarfe indeed, but ftrong and perfuafive, works like leaven in the heart of the people. In this ftate, all outward helps are fuperfluous, the living fpirit of devotion is amongft them, the world finks away to nothing before it, and every object but one is annihilated. The focial principle mixes with the flame, and renders it more intenfe; flrong parties are formed, and friends or lovers are not more clofely connected than the members of thefe little communities:

IT is this kind of devotion, a devotion which thofe of more fettled and peaceable times can only guefs at, which made amends to the firft Chriftians for all they refigned, and all they fuffered : this draws the martyr to a willing death, and enables the confeffor to endure a voluntary poverty. But this ftage cannot laft long: the heat of perfecution abates, and the fervour of zeal feels a proportional decay. Now comes on the period of reafoning and examination. The principles which have produced fuch mighty effects on the minds of men, acquire an importance, and become objects of the public attention. Opinions are canvaffed. Thofe who before bore teftimony to their religion only by patient fuffering, now defend it with argument; and all the keennefs of polemical difquifition is awakened on either fide. The fair and generous idea of religious liberty, which never originates in the breaft of a triumphant party, now begins to unfold itfelf. To vindicate thefe rights, and explain thefe principles, learning, which in the former ftate was defpifed, is affiduounly cultivated by the fectaries; their minds become enlightened, and a large partion of knowledge, efpecially religious knowledge, is diffufed through their whole body. Their manners are lefs auftere, without having as yet loft any thing of their original purity. Their minifters gain refpect as writers, and their pulpit difcourfes are ftudied and judicious. The moft unfavourable circumftance of this æra is, that thofe who diffent, are very apt to acquire a critical and difputatious fpirit; for, being continually called upon to defend doctrines in which they differ from the generality, their attention is early turned to the argumentative part of religion ; and hence we fee that fermons, which afford food for this tafte, are with them thought of more importance than prayer and praife, though thefe latter are undoubtedly the more genuine and indifpenfible parts of public worfhip.
\[
\text { R } 4 \text { berty }
\]

This then is the fecond period; the third approaches faft; men grow tired of a controverfy which becomes infipid from being exhaufted; perfecution has not only ceafed; it begins to be forgotten; and from the abfence of oppofition in either kind, fprings a fatal and fpiritlefs indifference. That fobriety, induftry, and abftinence from fafhionable pleafures, which diftinguifhed the fathers, has made the fons wealthy; and, eager to enjoy their riches, they long to mix with that world, a feparation from which was the beft guard to their virtues. A fecret fhame creeps in upon them, when they acknowacknowledge their relation to a difefteemed fect; they therefore endeavour to file off its peculiarities, but in fo doing they deftroy its very being. Connections with the eftablifhment, whether of intimacy, bufinefs, or relationfhip, which formerly, from their fuperior zeal, turned to the advantage of the fe&, now operate againft it. Yet thefe connections are formed more frequently than ever; and thofe who a little before, foured by the memory of recent fuffering, betrayed perhaps an averfion from having any thing in common with the Church, now affect to come as near it as poffible; and, like a little boat that takes a large veffel in tow, the fure confequence is, the being drawn into its vortex. They aim at elegance and fhow in their places of worfhip, the appearance of their preachers, &xc. and thus impoliticly awaken a tafte it is impoffible they fhould ever gratify.

They have worn off many forbidding fingularities, and are grown more amiable and pleafing. But thofe fingularities were of ufe: they fet a mark upon them, they pointed them out to the world, and thus obliged perfons fo diftinguifhed to exemplary ftrictnefs. No longer obnoxious to the world, they are open to all the feductions of it. Their minifter, that refpectable character which once infpired reverence and affectionate efteem, their teacher and their guide, is now dwindled into the mere leader of the public devotions; or, lower yet, a perfon hired to entertain them every week with an ele-gant difcourfe. In proportion as his importance decreafes, his falary fits heavy on the people; and he feels himfelf depreffed by that moft cruel of all mortifications to a generous mind, the confcioufnefs of being a burden upon thofe from whom he derives his fcanty fupport.

Unhappily,

Unhappily, amidft this change of manners, there are forms of ftrictnefs, and a fet of phrales introduced in their firft enthufiafin, which ftill fubfift: thefe they are afhamed to ufe, and know not how to decline ; and their behaviour, in confequence of them, is awkward and irrefolute. Thofe who have fet out with the largeft fhare of myfticifm and flighty zeal, find themfelves particularly embarraffed by this circumftance.

When things are come to this crifis, their tendency is evident: and though the intereft and name of a fect may be kept up for a time by the generofity of former ages, the abilities of particular men, or that reluctance which keeps a generous mind from breaking old connections; it mult, in a fhort courfe or years, melt away into the eftablifhment, the womb and the grave of all other modes of religion.

An Eftablifbment affects the mind by fplendid buildings, mufic, the myfterious pomp of antient ceremonies; by the facrednefs of peculiar orders, habits, and titles; by its fecular importance ; and by connecting with religion, ideas of order, dignity, and antiquity. It fpeaks to the heart through. the imagination and the fenfes; and though it never can raife devotion fo high as we have defcribed it in a beginning fect, it will preferve it from ever finking into contempt. As, to a woman in the glow of health and beauty, the moft carelefs drefs is the moft becoming; but when the frefhnefs of youth is worn off, greater attention is neceffary, and rich ornaments are required to throw an air of dignity round her perfon: fo while a fect retains its firf plainnefs, fimplicity and affectionate zeal, it wants nothing an eftablifhment could give; but that once declined, the latter becomes far more refpectable. The faults of an efta= blifhment grow venerable from length of time ; the improvements of a fect appear whimfical from their novelty. Antient families, fond of rank, and of that order which fecures it to them, are on the fide of the former. Traders incline to the latter ; and fo do generally men of genius, as it favours their originality of thinking. An eftablifhment leans it fupertition, a fect to enthufiafm; the one is a more dangerous and violent excefs, the other more fatally debilitates the powers of the mind; the one is a deeper colouring, the other a more lafting dye; but the coldnefs and languor of a declining fect produces fcepticifm. Indeed, a fect is never ftationary, as it depends entirely on paffions and opinions; though it often attains excellence, it never refts in it, but is always in danger of one extreme or the other; whereas an old eftablifhment,

\section*{devotional taste, &c. 255}
eftablifhment, whatever elfe it may want, poffeffes the grandeur arifing from ftability.

We learn to refpect whatever refpects itfelf; and are eafily led to think that fyftem requires no alteration, which never admits of any. It is this circumftance, more than any other, which gives a dignity to that accumulated mafs of error, the Church of Rome. A fabric which has weathered many fucceffive ages, though the architecture be rude, the parts difproportionate, and overloaded with ornament, ftrikes us with a fort of admiration, merely from its having held fo long together.

The minifter of a fect, and of an eftablifhment, is upon a very different footing. The former is like the popular leader of an army; he is obeyed with enthufiafm enthufiafm while he is obeyed at all; but his influence depends on opinion, and is entirely perfonal: the latter refembles a general appointed by the monarch; he has foldiers lefs warmly devoted to him, but more fteady, and better difciplined. The diffenting teacher is nothing if he have not the fpirit of a martyr ; and is the fcorn of the world, if he be not above the world. The clergyman, poffeffed of power and affluence, and for that reafon chofen from among the better ranks of people, is refpected as a gentleman, though not venerated as an apoftle; and as his profeffion generally obliges him to decent manners, his order is confidered as a more regular and civilized clafs of men than their fellowfubjects of the fame rank. The diffenting teacher, feparated from the people, but not raifed above them, invefted with no power, entitled to no emoluments, if he cannot acquire for himfelf authority, muft feel the bitternefs of dependance. The minifters of the former denomination cannot fall, but in fome violent convulfion of the ftate : thofe of the latter, when indifference and mutual neglect begin to fucceed to that clofe union which once fubfifted between them and their followers, lofe their former influence without refource; the dignity and weight of their office is gone for ever; they feel the infignificancy of their pretenfions, their fpirits fink, and, except they take refuge in fome collateral purfuit, and ftand candidates for literary fame, they flide into an ambiguous and undecided character; their time is too often facrificed to frivolous compliances; their manners lofe their aufterity, withour having 'proportionally gained, in elegance; the world does not acknowledge them, for they are not of the S world;
\(25^{8}\) THOUGHTS ON THE
world ; it cannot efteem thern, for they. are not fuperior to the world.

Upon the whole, then, it fhould feem, that the ftrictnefs of a fect (and it-can only be refpectable by being ftrict) is calculated for a few finer fpirits, owho make Religion their chief object. As to the much larger number, on whom fhe has only an imperfect influence, making them decent if not virtuous, and meliorating the heart without greatly changing it; for all thefe the genius of an eftablifhment is more eligible, and better fitted to cherifh that moderate devotion of which alone they are capable. All thofe who have not ftrength of mind to think for themfelves, who would live to virtue without denying the world, who wifh much to be religious, but more to be genteel-naturally flow into the eftablifhinent. If it offered no motives to their minds, but fuch as are perfectly pure and fpiritual, their devotion would not for that be more exalted, it would die away to nothing; and it is better their minds fhould receive only a tincture of religion, than be wholly without it. Thofe too, whofe paffions are regular and equable, and who do not aim at abftracted virtues, are commonly placed to moft advantage within the pale of the national faith.

All the greater exertions of the mind, fpirit to reform, fortitude and conftancy to fuffer, can be expected only from thofe who, forfaking the common road, are exercifed in a peculiar courfe of moral difcipline ; but it fhould be remembered, that thefe exertions cannot be expected from every character, nor on every occafion. Indeed, religion is a fentiment which takes fuch ftrong hold on all the moft powerful principles of our nature, that it may eafily be carried to excefs. The Deity never meant our regards to him fhould engrofs the mind : that indifference to fenfible objects, which many moralifts preach, is not perhaps defirable, except where the mind is raifed above its natural tone, and extraordinary fituations call forth extraordinary virtues.
\[
\mathrm{S}_{2} \quad \text { on }
\]

If the peculiar advantages of a fee were well underftood, its followers would not be impatient of thofe moderate refraints which do not rife to perfecution, nor affect any of their more material interefts: for, do they not bind them clofer to each other, cherifh zeal, and keep up the love of liberty? What is the language of fuch reftraints? Do they not fay, with a prevailing voice, Let the timorous and the worldly depart; no one fhall be of this perfuafion, who is not fincere, difinterefted, confcientious. It is notwithftanding proper, that men fhould be fenfible of all their rights, affert them boldly, and proteft againft every infringement; for it may be of advantage to bear what yet it is unjuftifiable in others to inflict.

Neither would diffenters, if they attended to their real interefts, be fo ambitious as they generally are, of rich converts. Such converts only accelerate their decline ; they relax their difcipline, and they acquire an influence wery pernicious in focieties which ought to breathe nothing but the fpirit of equality.

Sects are always ftrict in proportion to the corruption of eftablifhments and the licentioufnefs of the times, and they are ufeful in the fame proportion. Thus the auftere lives of the primitive Chrifians counterbalanced the vices of that abandoned period; and thus the Puritans in the reign of Charles the Second feafoned with a wholefome feverity the profligacy of public manners. They were lefs amiable than their defcendants of the prefent day ; but to be amiable was not the object: they were of public utility; and their fcrupulous fanctity (carried to excefs, themfelves only confidered) like a powerful antifeptic, oppofed the conta-gion breathed from a moft diffolute court. In like manner, that feet, one of whofe moft ftriking characteriftics is a beautiful fimplicity of dialect, ferved to check that ftrain of, fervile flattery and Gothic compliment fo prevalent in the fame period, and to keep up fome idea of that manly plainnefs with which one human being ought to addrefs another.

Thus have we feen that different modes of religion, though they bear little good-will to each other, are neverthelefs mutually ufeful. Perhaps there is not an eftablifhment fo corrupt, as not to make the grofs of mankind better than they would be without it. Perhaps there is not a fect fo eccentric, but that it has fet fome one truth in the ftrongeft light, or carried fome one virtue, before neglected, to its utmoft height, or loofened fome obftinate and long-rooted prejudice. They anfwer their end; they die away; others fpring up, and take their place. So the purer part of the element, continually drawn off from the mighty mafs of waters, forms rivers, which, running in various directions, fertilize large countries; yet, always tending towards the ocean, every, acceffion to their bulk or grandeur but precipitates their courfe, and haftens their re-union with the common refervoir from which they were feparated.

In the mean time, the devout heart always finds affociates fuitable to its difpofition, and the particular caft of its virtues; while the continual flux and reflux of opinions prevents the active principles from ftagnating. There is an analogy between things material and immaterial. As, from fome late experiments in philofophy it has been found, that the procefs of vegetation reftores and purifies vitiated air; fo does that moral and political ferment which accompanies the growth of new fects, communicate a kind of fpirit and elafticity neceffary to the vigour and health of the foul, but foon loft amidit the corrupted breath of an indifcriminate multitude.

\section*{devotional taste, &C. 265}

There remains only to add, left the preceding view of Sects and Eftablifhments fhould in any degree be mifapprehended, that it has nothing to do with the truth of opinions, and relates only to the influence which the adventitious circumftances attending them may have upon the manners and morals of their followers. It is therefore calculated to teach us candour, but not indifference. Large views of the moral polity of the world may ferve to illuftrate the providence of God in his different difpenfations, but are not made to regulate our own individual conduct, which muft confcientioufly follow our own opinions and belief. We may fee much good in an Eftablifhment, the doctrines of which we cannot give our affent to without violating our integrity ; we may refpect the tendencies of a Sect, the tenets of which we utterly difapprove. We may think practices

\title{
266 тHOUGHTS, & \(x\). practices ufeful which we cannot adopt without hypocrify. We may think all relicions beneficial, and believe of one alone that it is true.
}

\section*{Publifhed by the Authors of this Work.}

\section*{I. By Mrs. \(B A R B A U L D\).}
1. POEMS, a new Edition: Price 3s. 6d. fewed.
2. Leffons for Children, from Two to Four Years. of Age. Four Parts. Price 6d. each, or 2 s .6 d . bound together.
3. Hymns for Children. Price 1s. fewed, or 1s. 6d. bound.
II. By Dr. \(A I K I N\).
1. POEMS. Price 3s. 6d. fewed.
2. An Effay on the Application of Natural Hiftory to Poetry. Price 2s. 6d. fewed.
3. A View of the Character and Public Services. of the late Mr. Howard. Price 3s. 6d. fewed.

4: England Delineated ; or, a Geographical Defcription of every County in England and Wales. With outline Maps of the Counties. Second Edition. Price 7s. bound.
5. The

\section*{BOOKS PUBLISHED BY DR: AIKIN.}
5. The Calendar of Nature, for the Entertainment and Inftruction of young Perfons. Third Edition. Price 1s. fewed, or 1s. 6d. bound.
6. Obfervations on the External Ufe of Preparations of Lead, with Remarks on Topical Applications in general. Second Edition. Price 1s.6d.
7. Thoughts on Hofpitals. Price 1s. 6d.
8. Heads of Chemiftry. Price 1s.6d.
9. Oeconomiæ Animalis Delineatio in Ufum Juventutis Medicæ. Price 1s. 6d.
10. Biogrophical Memoirs of Medicine in Great Britain, to the Time of Harvey. Price 4 s. fewed.
11. A Manual of Materia Medica, containing a brief Account of all the Simples directed in the London and Edinburgh Difpenfatories, with their feveral Preparations, and the principal Compofitions into which they enter. Price 2s. 6d. fewed.
12. Lewis's Materia Medica. । Fourth Edition, with Additions. By J. Aikin, M. D. Two Vols. Ottavo. Price I3s. in Boards.

Printed for 7 . \(\mathcal{F O H N S O N , ~ i n ~ S t . P a u l ' s ~ C l u r c h - y a r d . ~}\)

\begin{abstract}
\(\square\)

2nenclun
\[
-\frac{1}{2}
\]

2nenclun
\end{abstract}

\section*{PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE \\ CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET}

\section*{UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY}

PR Aikin, John
4001 Miscellaneous pieces in A5Al6 prose 3d ed
1792```

[^0]:    B 4 enter-

[^1]:    * I AM concerned to obferve an inftance of illiberal national ridicule without any merit of compofition to palliate it, from a refpectable dramatic writer, which is alfo rendered much more obnoxious by the circumftances. M. Voltaire's Ecoffaife was purpofely written to exhibit a worthy Englifh character; marked, indeed, with fome whimfical peculiarities, but diftinguifhed by a ftrong rpirit of benevolence. It was impoffible to expofe national foibles more gently than by combining them with national virtues. When this Piece was brought on our ftage under the title of the Engliß Merchant, a French valet was inferted among the perfonce dramatis, characterifed by nothing but his faife Englifh, and for no other end but to be exbibited as a fcoundrel!

